Tokyo Offers to Settle Border Dispute by Documents.

Litvinoff Rejects Initial Overtures

Nippon Must Recognize Treaty of '86 Before Peace Conference.

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, Aug. 4.—Soviet Russia accepted conditionally tonight a Japanese proposal for peace along the Manchukuoan border.

In conditional acceptance of the truce proposal, Foreign Commissar Maxim Litvinoff told Japanese Ambassador Mamoru Shigemitsu that if Japanese soldiers got back where they belonged, Soviet military activity in the disputed area would end automatically.

[Japan's first verbal proposals for a "peaceful settlement" of the border clash were rejected by Soviet Russia, the United Press said. It was understood, however, conversations between Foreign Commissar Maxim Litvinoff and Japanese Ambassador Mamoru Shigemitsu will be continued.—Editor's note.]

Japan's Terms.

Shigemitsu, in two conferences, submitted Japan's proposals for peaceful settlement of the intensified renewal of border warfare in the Changkufeng area at the junction of Russian Siberia, Japanese Korea and Japanese-dominated Manchukuo.

Japan's terms for settlement of the hostilities were understood to have involved:

Cessation of hostilities;

Settlement of the boundary dispute through diplomatic channels on the basis of documents and materials in the possession of both sides.

Maps attached to the Russian-Chinese treaty of June 25, 1886, would be studied along with other documents, under the Japanese proposal.

These are the maps upon which Russia bases her claim to the Changkufeng Hills, occupied by Soviet troops July 11, and where there has been heavy fighting since Sunday.

Litvinoff replied the Soviet gov-

D.C. Woman's Body Taken From River At South Boston

South Boston, Va., Aug. 4, (AP).—The body of Miss Mary Briscoe Owen, about 50, of 808 Twenty-second street northwest, Washington, was found in the Dan River here at 6 o'clock tonight. A highway bridge crosses the river at the point almost in South Boston's business district. She was a clerk in the office of The Adjutant General.

Her friends said she left the home of Miss Louise Thompson, a relative, here about 6 a. m. Wednesday, presumably to go to the home of her brother, Dr. John A. Owen, of Turbeville, about 11 miles from South Boston. She had not been seen since.

She had come to Halifax County Monday to rest from a recent operation, it was said.

Brown Bars Children in Streets To Halt Deaths; Asks Parents' Aid

Scores Reckless Drivers; Youths to Patrol Crossings.

By Howard F. Wentworth.

A sharply-worded order from Maj. Ernest W. Brown yesterday threw every resource of the Metropolitan Police Department behind renewed efforts to halt highway tragedies and protect the lives of children on Washington streets.

Demanding the immediate arrest of all motorists who ignore the safety of others by driving recklessly or carelessly, Maj. Brown called for drastic action and instructed members of his command to clear the streets of youngsters who endanger their lives in heavy traffic.

As the entire city stood aghast at one of the most appalling juvenile traffic tolls in recent years—nine children have been killed in the past month—Maj. Brown was joined by the District Commissioners in appealing to parents and drivers for aid in stopping the needless slaughter.

Five Parks Opened.

Shortly after the police head issued his stringent order, Commissioner Dan I. Sultan, speaking for Commissioner Hazen who is absent from the city, urged parents to share the city's traffic safety responsibility by sending their children to supervised playgrounds. Five additional recreation centers were opened yesterday in various sections of the District.

The American Automobile Association also joined the battle against child deaths by agreeing to provide safety patrols at each of the 73 playgrounds operated by the Community Center. Beginning Monday, 365 youngsters, equipped and trained for protecting lives, will be enlisted for safety duty.

The patrols will operate under supervision of experienced safety men and will act to protect youngsters crossing dangerous streets near the playgrounds.

Indicates Lack of Control.

In his order to commanders of the various police precincts, Maj. Brown indicated lack of parental control was responsible for the new high mark in juvenile fatalities. The order read:

"The increased number of deaths of children of tender years in motor vehicle accidents in the District of Columbia indicates a lack of proper supervision and calls for drastic action.

"You will instruct the members of your command to give special attention to small children observed in public streets without adult supervision or guidance, and where the child is of tender years the policeman will take the child to its parents and advise the parent of the danger involved in permitting children in the public streets without proper adult supervision and impress upon the parent the importance of safeguarding the children in preventing further injuries or deaths.

"Older children found playing in public streets should be directed to playgrounds and a few words of advice given as to the danger involved in playing in public streets.

"Motorists observed operating their motor vehicles in a reckless or careless manner or disregarding the safety of others should be immediately arrested.

"The responsibility rests with the motorists, the parent, the police and the child, and only by each and every one rendering their full co-operation in carrying out their responsibility can this appalling death of children be prevented."

Echoing the apparent sentiment of every District official intrusted with protecting Washington citizens—young and old—Commissioner Sultan pointed to the city's efforts in accident prevention and said:

"We urge parents to play their

G. O. P. Parley Backs Group Health Effort

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Chicago, Aug. 4.—The Social Security Round-Table of the Republican Program Committee today called upon the American Medical Association not to obstruct experiments in group health programs. The greatest possible development of co-operative medical projects was urged.

The sentiments expressed at a luncheon meeting had timely significance because of legal action begun this week by the Department of Justice against the Medical Association for alleged acts in fighting Group Health, Inc., organized in Washington, by 2,500 Government workers.

The plea to the Medical Association was made by M. A. Linton, leader of the Republican Round-Table on Social Security, President

Pa. Prosecutor Won't Give Up Data to Earle

Shelley Tells Legislature Judge Has Impounded 'Graft' Evidence.

By the Associated Press.

Harrisburg, Pa., Aug. 4.—District Attorney Carl B. Shelley refused today to hand over to a Pennsylvania House of Representatives investigating committee evidence he said he had gathered in support of charges against Gov. George H. Earle and 13 associates.

The evidence was intended for a grand jury investigation which the Legislature has moved to suspend.

Shelley, coming before the committee in response to two subpenas—one ordering him to appear, the other demanding his evidence—said he could not comply because of an order by Judge Paul N. Schaeffer impounding the evidence.

Judge Schaeffer refused yesterday to rescind orders impounding the evidence and ordering Shelley not to testify before the committee.

Herbert B. Cohen, chairman of the committee, said no action would be taken against Shelley for refusing to give up the evidence until the court has ruled on the tangle over the conflicting investigations.

"It would have been impossible for me to bring in the evidence,"

California Quake Sways Buildings

Huntington Beach, Calif., Aug. 4 (U.P.).—A sharp earthquake was felt here at 5:58 p. m. P. S. T. (8:58 p. m. E. S. T.) tonight, followed by a slighter jolt 7 minutes later. No damage was reported, although buildings swayed. The disturbance seemed to have been local, with its epicenter out at sea. Santa Ana and other towns in the near vicinity did not feel the shock.

Los Angeles, Aug. 4 (U.P.).—A slight earthquake rocked the south side of Los Angeles tonight. Houses swayed on their foundations, but there were no reports of damage.

Heat Kills Two, Fells Two Here As Torrid Wave Grips Nation

A temperature above 90 and stifling humidity under partially cloudy skies yesterday brought death to two Washingtonians, prostration to at least two others and discomfort to many as most of the Nation as well as the Northern Hemisphere sweltered in a general heat wave.

The District's fatalities were Marie Gregory, 60, colored, of 913 E street southwest, and Nathan Howard, 30, of 1516 Monticello street northwest.

Mrs. Gregory's death was the first from heat here this summer. She toppled to the sidewalk in the 1400 block of Monroe street northwest and was pronounced dead by an Emergency Hospital physician.

Howard, an employe of the United Clay Products Corporation, at New York avenue and Bladensburg road northeast, was overcome at the plant. He died at Emergency Hospital a few hours later.

As the thermometer here recorded a maximum of 90.5 at 4:30 p. m., and a humidity of .59 at the same time, Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald was investigating another death, that of Birdie Stout, colored, 34, of the 400 block of M street northwest, to determine whether she, too, was a heat victim. The woman fell dead of a heart attack while in a beauty parlor in the 600 block of L street southwest.

Four young women employed at the main offices of the Western Union Co., 708 Fourteenth street northwest, were stricken ill while at work yesterday afternoon. Dr. Harry Lewis said he had not yet determined whether the four were made ill from the heat or from eating contaminated food.

After treatment, all were sent to their homes. Those made ill were

Yachts, Tugs Toot Sirens For Corrigan

Fog Delays Manhattan; Tickertape Welcome Set for Today.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Aug. 4.—Douglas Corrigan set a personal precedent today by arriving at his announced destination, New York, and New York repaid him by staging a celebration if seldom, if ever, has exceeded for pure enthusiasm.

Fireboats, yachts, tugs, excursion steamers, Coast Guard cutters, putt-putts and rowboats, most of them loaded with Irishmen, swarmed to the Narrows to greet him as he came in on the Manhattan. Thousands of landlubbers lined the seawalls at the Battery or waited at the Eighteenth street pier.

The young California flyer was as bewildered as ever yesterday at the sights and sounds in the harbor, and he said the experience tired him more than the flight. He finally escaped to his suite at the McAlpin, after attending a private dinner at the Biltmore, and went to bed to rest up for the official reception, which will be held tomorrow.

Cheers, Ticker Tape, LaGuardia.

At noon the parade will start at the Battery and follow the usual route to City Hall through a barrage of cheers, ticker tape and banners. After being greeted by Mayor F. H. LaGuardia he will go to lunch at the Advertising Club, 23 Park avenue, and after that, at about 3 p. m., he will be delivered to the mercies of the Brooklyn adherents who fought so bitterly and unsuccessfully to have him visit their borough first.

First they will take him to Floyd Bennett Field, whence he started his flight, where a short reception will be held, and then a motorcade of 400 cars will accompany him to Grand Army Plaza, Prospect Park, where 20,000 marchers are expected to pitch in. The entire line will proceed to Borough Hall, where Borough President Raymond V. Ingersoll and others will greet the confused eagle. Twenty-two hundred patrolmen, 100 sergeants, 11 captains, 6 inspectors, 82 mounted men, and about 40 motorcycle patrolmen will be used to handle the crowds.

In the evening he will come back to Manhattan for musical doings. At 8:15 p. m. a special Irish concert will be held at Lewisohn Stadium, and at 10 p. m. there will be monster goings-on at the Yankee Stadium, donated for the occasion by Col. Jacob Ruppert, owner of the New York Yankees, who will be celebrating his seventy-first birthday. The United Irish societies are

Pecora Sustains Dewey in Battle On Hines Motion

New York, Aug. 4 (AP).—District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey won a major point today in his preparations to try Tammany District Leader James J. Hines for conspiracy on a charge of policy racketeering when Supreme Court Justice Ferdinand Pecora upheld a brief bill of particulars he submitted earlier this week.

Dewey said the three public officers named in the bill, former District Attorney W. C. Dodge, Magistrate Hulon Capshaw and the late Magistrate Francis Erwin, were the only ones involved in evidence, but they were not all who had been influenced by Hines and others in the $100,000,000 alleged conspiracy.

Lloyd Paul Stryker, Hines' counsel, had demanded a further bill or, as an alternative, dismissal of the indictment, but Justice Pecora denied the application.

'Trust-Busting' Staff Is Doubled

The anti-trust division of the Justice Department virtually has doubled its staff of attorneys and economic experts since July 1 in preparation for the largest "trust-busting" drive in the Nation's history, it was disclosed last night.

Contemplating expenditure of nearly $800,000 before July 1, 1939, including the extra $250,000 requested by President Roosevelt in his monopoly message last spring, the division has increased its total personnel to 170, including clerical help.

Forty new attorneys have been added to the staff which averaged 45 last year.

Crump Ticket Leads As City Vote Is Tallied In Tennessee Primary

TOM STEWART.

Cooper, Stewart Forge Ahead of Browning and Sen. Berry.

Election Is Quiet; Frauds Charged

Candidates of Memphis Boss Hold Their Own in Rural Area.

By the Associated Press.

Nashville, Tenn., Aug. 4.—A slowly tabulated city vote late tonight was swinging Tennessee's Democratic primary lead in favor of three candidates backed by the strong organization of National Committeeman E. H. Crump, Memphis political leader.

After a seesaw battle on the face of early rural returns, Prentice Cooper, of Shelbyville, moved well in front of Gov. Gordon Browning, seeking re-nomination, and Tom Stewart forged ahead of Junior Senator George L. Berry and Representative Ridley Mitchel in the race for the United States Senate. Crump's candidate for the Public Utilities commission had a substantial lead.

The election was regarded as virtually without national significance from the New Deal standpoint, as the campaign was fought largely on personalities developing from a break between Crump and Browning. Senior United States Senator Kenneth McKellar joined Crump in the fight.

Heavy Vote in Memphis.

Returns from 1,687 out of 2,271 precincts showed:

For utilities commissioner (1,598 precincts); J. D. Hudson, 84,958; W. H. Turner, incumbent 42,571.

The organization commanded by Crump rolled up a heavy vote in Shelby County (Memphis) for its coalition ticket.

Only One Arrest.

The election was one of the quietest in the county's history and only one arrest was reported.

District Attorney General Joseph Hanover reported several complaints of election irregularities had been lodged with his office and were turned over to Police Commissioner Clifford Davis for investigation.

Memphis was the main battleground of the bitter campaign based on personalities developing from the Crump-Browning feud.

[The city was expected to give the Crump candidates leads of anywhere from 40,000 to 70,000.—Editor's note.]

While hundreds of armed peace officers patrolled the streets and polls there, Browning supporters complained to authorities that Crump's friends were marking colored voters' ballots for Prentice

Political Fund Inquiry Shifts To Ohio Race

Taft, G.O.P. Candidate for Senate, Fails to Report as Deadline Passes.

By William V. Nessly.

The Senate committee investigating campaign expenditures suddenly shifted its attention to Ohio yesterday on charges of excessive use of money in the Republican Senatorial primary campaign.

At the same time it warned Gov. George H. Earle, of Pennsylvania, Senators Pat McCarran, Homer T. Bone, Ryan F. Duffy and Carl Hayden and 25 other Senate aspirants to have their expenditure reports in the hands of the committee by next Wednesday, or "further steps" will be taken to obtain the data.

The Ohio activity was occasioned by failure of Robert A. Taft, G. O. P. Senate candidate, to report on money received and spent by his campaign committee, though he had reported personal expenditures of $15,600. Chairman Morris Sheppard (Democrat), of Texas, set 3:30 p. m. yesterday as the deadline for Taft's report and when that hour arrived without a message from the son of the former President, Sheppard said an investigator would be sent to Ohio to obtain the information.

Taft Sends Telegram.

Later a message was received from Taft saying a letter had been mailed to the Senate group and adding that the campaign committee's figures would be forwarded today. The plan to send the investigator then was canceled.

Taft's telegram to the committee added:

"I did not construe your question as to expenditures by other persons to refer to committees legally constituted under Ohio law. The same construction was placed on questionnaire by every other candidate I know of, including my opponent, Arthur H. Day. He filed personal expenditures of $3,800 and omitted all reference to the campaign committee, which, to my knowledge, collected funds much in excess of that amount. Why does your committee not demand committee report from Day and others instead of making discriminatory demands on me? I do not question committee's authority as you stated

3 Shot, 1 Dies Near Barkley Headquarters

By the Associated Press.

Jackson, Ky., Aug. 4.—Former Sheriff Lee Combs died in the City Hospital of wounds suffered in a shooting affray in which two other politically prominent Breathitt Countians were wounded on Main street here tonight.

His brother, Lewis Combs, county chairman of Gov. Chandler's senatorial campaign, and Sheriff Walter Deaton were wounded.

The shooting occurred in front of the former Hargis Bank Building, opposite the courthouse, which houses the county campaign headquarters of Senator Barkley, Chandler's opponent.

By Sidney Olson.

A Staff Correspondent.

Mayfield, Ky., Aug. 4.—On the shade-dappled lawn at Lowes Crossroads, 2 miles from the log cabin in which he was born 61 years ago, Senator Alben W. Barkley today perspiringly spoke to 300 citizens of Graves County:

"If you want to swap all you're getting now from the Federal Government for a set of balanced budget books down in Washington, then vote for Happy Chandler.

"But if you want to keep on getting what you're getting, and get some more too, then vote to keep me in the Senate."

But 14 miles away, here in Mayfield, home of west Kentucky's clothing factories, Gov. A. B. (Happy) Chandler electrified 2,000 voters, steaming with heat and oratory, with an even more attractive promise:

"I'll get more for you in 6 years than Ol' Alben got you in 26 years."

Here where politics are hotter than the corn whisky of the mountains, the chunky young Governor who wants a Senate seat crossed with the man who holds it, in the very heart of Barkley's home ground.

Barkley said at Lowes today he will win by 75,000. Chandler predicted here today he will win by 25,000. Both stressed faith in the Gallup Kentucky poll, to be released tomorrow morning.

All the gambling money in this horsy State, however, is two to one tonight on Barkley with no takers,

Confession Bares Illicit Loves In Slaying of Doctor and Wife

By the United Press.

South Paris, Me., Aug. 4.—Former Deputy Sheriff Francis M. Carroll was accused today of attempting by bribery and bullets to recover letters charging him with the seduction of his own daughter—letters that allegedly led to the murder of Dr. James G. Littlefield.

The accusation, contained in the 17-page confession written by Paul (Buddy) Dwyer, the daughter's sweetheart, shortly after he was sentenced to life imprisonment for the murder, was read to the court at Carroll's trial late today.

Dwyer, 19-year-old onetime "sheik of Paris Hill," sat in the witness box as Defense Counsel Clyde R. Chapman read the amazing document that names Carroll as the "real slayer" of Dr. Littlefield.

Carroll's daughter, pretty, brown-haired Barbara Carroll, 17, was with her mother in the second row of the hot, crowded courtroom. They strained forward to catch Chapman's every word and at times Mrs. Carroll cupped her hand to her ear, the better to hear. Only a few feet away within the bar enclosure was Carroll.

Chapman had not finished reading Dwyer's so-called "final confession" when court adjourned for the day. He was expected to take up the part dealing with the actual murder tomorrow.

"In laying the fundamentals of this catastrophe," the confession began, "I've got to go back to the time when I was going 'steady' with Barbara Carroll . . .

"It was on a night in May, 1936, that the inevitable happened and . . . I let things go.

"I was very ashamed and scared.

Sen. Burke Says 3d Term Would Break Up Party

Second Democratic Leader in Week Gives Warning for Roosevelt.

By the Associated Press.

For the second time this week a Democratic Senator voiced the view yesterday that the Democratic Party would be split and the President defeated if he tried to obtain a third term.

Senator Burke (Democrat), Nebraska, who has opposed many Administration measures and criticized the National Labor Relations Board repeatedly, said that if President Roosevelt ran for a third term it would "split the Democratic Party into a thousand pieces."

Earlier in the week Senator Lewis (Democrats), Illinois, an Administration stalwart and Democratic whip of the Senate, expressed a somewhat similar view. Lewis expressed the opinion that Mr. Roosevelt could be re-elected only if a third party sprang up, threatening Government ownership of private enterprise and repudiation of Government securities, and business appealed to the President to stay in power.

Favors One Long Term.

Burke, who placed before the last Congress a resolution proposing a Constitutional amendment to limit terms of Presidents to one six-year term, said he would reintroduce the resolution when the next Congress convenes. He said the length of the term was not of much concern to him and that he would be just as well content to have it set at seven or eight years as six.

In 1913 the Senate passed a resolution proposing a Constitutional amendment to limit the term of the President to one of six years, but it died in the House.

Burke said the Government's operations had become such vast enterprises that it was unfair to ask any man who had served one term to try for another.

Says No One Can Do It.

"I have no idea as to President Roosevelt's thought on the matter," the Nebraskan added. "He thinks he can carry out his program better than anyone else. In this situation there alway will be people around who will urge him to seek a third term.

"I don't think any man could be elected to a third term. President Roosevelt probably could come as close as anybody, but he would be defeated. I personally would oppose anyone seeking a third term under any circumstance."

Burke departed yesterday for Providence, R. I., where he is scheduled to speak today at Bryant College.

Garner Is Boomed.

Dallas, Tex., Aug. 4 (AP).—A Texas delegation instructed to vote for John N. Garner for President in the 1940 national Democratic convention was urged here today by Roy Miller, of Corpus Christi, State director of finance for the Democratic National Committee.

"I am confident that Vice President Garner is the Presidential choice of a majority of the Democrats of the Nation, and that we have an excellent chance to win the nomination for him in 1940," Miller said in an interview.

Judge of Customs' Pay Held Taxable

By the Associated Press.

The Board of Tax Appeals has ruled the salary of a judge of the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals is subject to Federal income taxes.

In an opinion on file yesterday the board disagreed with the contention of Judge Charles S. Hatfield, of West Millgrove, Ohio, that his salary was exempt from taxation under a clause of the revenue act of 1934. This clause provided for the inclusion in gross income of the salaries of judges taking office after June 6, 1932. Judge Hatfield was appointed by President Harding in 1923.

The board held it was not the intention of Congress to exempt the salaries of judges taking office prior to June 6, 1932, asserting reference to this date in the 1934 act was not "a provision of exemption or exclusion but of extension and inclusion."

As a result of the ruling Judge Hatfield must pay income tax deficiencies of $1,080.35 for the years 1934 and 1935.

Corn Referendum Expected About Sept. 3 on Quotas

By the Associated Press.

Federal farm officials made tentative arrangements yesterday for a referendum in the corn belt about September 3 on a proposal to invoke marketing quotas.

Private forecasts of a corn crop in excess of 2,500,000,000 bushels indicated, officials said, that an election would be necessary to determine whether growers want to use quotas to keep surplus corn off the market.

The new farm act directs that a referendum be held when the indicated supply is 17.7 percent or more above normal domestic and export needs.

The surplus from last year's crop has been forecast at between 350,000,000 and 400,000,000 bushels. With a new crop of 2,500,000 bushels, the supply would be large enough to make a referendum mandatory.

Final decision on an election must be made by August 15 on the basis of a forecast on this year's crop next Wednesday by the Federal Crop Reporting Board.

THOMAS F. CARLIN.

State Deputy Well Equipped by Experience to Guide Religious and Charitable Activities of 2,500 Members.

By Christine Sadler.

Knights of Columbus in the District of Columbia number above 2,500, are headed by State Deputy Thomas F. Carlin and engage in activities that extend into the fields of education, patriotism, fraternalism, religion, charity and civic welfare. The members are divided into five local councils—Washington, Keane, Carroll, Spalding and Potomac—all of which hold their meetings at the Knights of Columbus Club at Tenth and K streets.

After a year's preparation, the Knights plan to sponsor Sunday broadcasts during the coming year. A radio guild has been organized and outlines for the instructive and entertaining programs tentatively sketched.

Outstanding among the charitable and civic endeavors of the organization is the annual "pound" party sponsored by it for the Little Sisters of the Poor. Due to a rule of their order, the Little Sisters do not receive help from the Community Chest, despite the vast amount of charitable work they do. Almost two tons of foodstuffs were "pounded" on the order at the eleventh party given by the Knights last November—in addition to money donations totaling more than $3,200.

The Christmas party of the Knights is well known among orphans of the District.

The Knights of Columbus Band, which has 45 young players, holds regular concerts at various orphanages and institutions and participates in community parades and programs.

Monthly lectures on popular subjects were sponsored by the Knights during the past season.

Among religious activities of the organization last year were the annual vesper service, annual communion mass and breakfast, annual fourth degree Mother's Day celebration, annual spiritual retreat at Manresa-on-the-Severn, and the annual Catholic Action Forum—which was held on four Sunday evenings and attended by thousands.

Carlin comes to the office of State deputy after several years of training. He has just completed a year as faithful navigator of Washington General Assembly, Fourth Degree, which is the patriotic degree of the order. He served the Spalding Council as grand knight for two years. He is a native of Washington and a member of the Board of Trade. He is married and the father of two daughters.

On Monday, Frank R. Jelleff, president of the Boys Club of Washington, will be next in the "Working for Washington" series.

CIO Workmen Go Back to Jobs When Maytag Plant Reopens

Only Two Soldiers Stand on Roof at Quitting Time; Superintendent Expects 200 More to Return Today.

By the Associated Press.

Newton, Iowa, Aug. 4.—Maytag Washing Machine Co. officials tonight said approximately 1,000 men had reported for work today as the roar of a factory in production broke the stillness of a 13-week-old strike.

A. H. Taylor, plant superintendent, said he expected an additional 200 workers to report tomorrow to increase the force to within 200 of the factory's capacity.

Both C. I. O. unionists and back-to-workers streamed into the plant after noon today after the union capitulated to the terms of Gov. Nelson G. Kraschel's order for resumption of operations under martial law. The union, however, roundly criticized the Governor in a set of resolutions and promised to open negotiations with the company for a final settlement after the troops leave.

Workers Leave Quietly.

Workers left the factory quietly after the whistle blew to end the day's work. Some had their arms over each other's shoulders and walked side by side despite a military edict to depart in single file. The cordon of National Guardsmen was reduced considerably from the precautionary force which watched from riot formation the return of the men to the plant at noon.

Only two soldiers armed with tear gas rifles were stationed on the factory roof when quitting time arrived.

Fate of the 12 union members barred from the plant was one of the problems confronting the union. The company sent discharge notices to the men today. The workers were charged with "unlawful activity and untoward and insubordinate conduct."

Piece Workers Busy.

Observers who discovered employes working at break-neck speed in the plant foundry were told that the men were not making up for lost time, but are piece workers, whose income depends upon their production output.

Every department in the factory was operating today, Taylor said, and completed machines were streaming off the assembly line.

Downtown Newton was doing business "as usual," with little evidence of apprehension over the turn in developments which opened the plant under the guns of the Iowa militia.

Closed in Wage Row.

The factory closed May 9 in a dispute over a 10 per cent wage cut. Last night the company proposed a settlement plan which included the wage cut. The union turned it down and the Governor ordered the factory opened because he said he was convinced the offer was the best that could be made at this time.

Meanwhile in Des Moines the National Labor Relations Board hearing on Maytag practices recessed until tomorrow. Albert Gove, a back-to-worker, testified he obtained funds for the movement by passing the hat among Newton business and professional men.

WPA Workers to Confer.

Blacksburg, Va., Aug. 4 (AP).—WPA and NYA workers in Virginia will take part in conferences to be held at Virginia Tech Friday, August 5, through Thursday, August 11.

A. F. L. to Start Maritime Union Rivaling C. I. O.

Organization to Be Built Around Pacific Sailors Group.

A new union of unlicensed ship workers, to be included in a maritime department within the American Federation of Labor, was announced yesterday by William Green, A. F. of L. president, as a move against the National Maritime Union, of the Committee for Industrial Organization.

The new union, to include "all the unlicensed personnel on American and Canadian ships," will be built around the existing Sailors Union of the Pacific, headed by Harry Lundeberg. The S. U. P. now has some 8,000 members, the A. F. of L. said, and a referendum on joining the new organization will be held within the next two weeks among some 17,000 members of other A. F. of L. unions on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts and the Great Lakes.

An intensive membership drive will be conducted on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, designed to double the present potential membership of 25,000 within a year, Green said. In addition, on the West Coast, Lundeberg's union, composed now mostly of seamen, will seek to take in firemen, oilers, cooks, stewards and other unlicensed personne.

Sees 60,000 Membership.

Following the referendum on joining the new union, if the vote is favorable, an international charter will be issued to the S. U. P., and a convention will be held, at which a new name will be selected and officers elected.

A possible membership of from 60,000 to 75,000 was envisaged for the proposed union.

The maritime department to be created in the A. F. L., will "embrace all off-shore and waterfront organizations in a powerful alliance," Green said.

"Members of the S. U. P. agree not to come over to the Atlantic to compete for jobs with the East Coast seamen where the latter have agreements with ship owners.

"With this set-up, it becomes evident that, under agressive, responsible and inspiring leadership, American Federation of Labor unions will stand pre-eminent in the Maritime Field."

Lundeberg Splits with Bridges.

The announcement placed the Federation in direct competition for the first time with the C. I. O.'s National Maritime Union, which claims 45,000 members and is headed by Joseph Curran of New York. Each group disputes the other's membership claims. It also marked the final break between Lundeberg and Harry Bridges, West Coast director and President of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union.

At the same time, Green announced the A. F. L. has "no complaint with the Wagner act" but again attacked administration of the law by the National Labor Relations Board. He said the Federation believes the NLRB's administration is contrary to both the spirit and letter of the law" but added he did not know what steps it would take to obtain better administration.

He said the A. F. L. has not communicated with President Roosevelt concerning reappointment of NLRB Member Donald Wakefield Smith whose term expires August 27. It has been hinted the Federation will fight him.

Green said possible Wagner act amendments and Smith's reappointment will be considered by the executive council in Atlantic City late this month and at the Houston, Tex., convention in October.

The new maritime department probably will be set up at the council meeting.

The work at the Alexandria plant will be done by the A. G. Crunkleton Electric Co., Greencastle, Pa., for $89,678, and the installments at the Naval Academy will be made by the Otis Elevator Co., 810 Eighteenth street northwest, at a contract price of $16,634.

The Gallup Poll

Barkley Ahead of Chandler as Kentucky Primary Enters Home Stretch.

By Dr. George Gallup,
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

George Gallup

Gov. Chandler, who has made his race in the face of White House preference for his opponent, had failed to catch up with Senator Barkley in ballots received in the survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion up until Tuesday night.

In this final survey the Institute again used a staff of field reporters to cover the State from end to end—from the mountainous coal regions in the east to the wheat and tobacco farms of the west.

This is the way the cross-section of Kentucky Democrats divided:

"Do you favor Barkley or Chandler for United States Senator?"

BARKLEY	59%
CHANDLER	41%

Chandler Has Gained on Barkley in Institute Tests.

In an active and colorful campaign Gov. Chandler has been creeping up on the Senator, who held what seemed an impregnable lead several months ago.

Early in March the Institute conducted a preliminary test survey in Kentucky and found Senator Barkley leading Chandler by approximately 2 to 1. But the 40-year-old Governor has been waging a tireless campaign, going a long way toward making good his promise to shake hands with every voter in the State before election day tomorrow.

	Barkley	Chandler
March	69%	31%
April	67	33
May	65	35
July 8	64	36
July 24	61	39
Today	59	41

Roosevelt's Visit.

Gov. Chandler continued to gain on Barkley, the surveys show, even after President Roosevelt stopped in Kentucky early last month to laud Barkley's record as the New Deal's Senate majority leader.

It is possible, of course, that Chandler would have gained even more sharply if it had not been for the President's declaration.

Today's Institute report is based upon samplings of opinion up to the middle of the week. Many factors, of course, can upset predictions based upon such a survey. A survey of this type cannot take into account the following factors, some of which may be present in the Kentucky showdown tomorrow: (1) dishonesty or bribery at the polls; (2) the ability of the two sides in turning out the vote for their candidate, and (3) the trend of sentiment, or last minute changes in sentiment.

Barkley Voters Confident.

In previous surveys, Institute findings have indicated the winners in 54 out of 60 State and local elections. The Kentucky primary will mark the sixty-first election test of the new science of public opinion measurement, as exemplified in Institute studies.

If the Institute forecast should be wrong, however, three out of four Kentucky Democrats also will be mistaken. As a supplementary part of its present survey the Institute has asked, "Which candidate do you think will win?" Seventy-one per cent of all voters answer "Barkley."

Marines Caution 'Benefit' Donors

Marine Corps headquarters yesterday gave warning against persons representing themselves to be Marine officers and soliciting funds for a fictitious benefit dance said to be scheduled for next month.

"The Marine Corps wishes the public to know," it was announced, "that it is not sponsoring any dance or benefit of any kind, and that persons representing themselves to be Marine officers endeavoring to sell tickets are impostors. It will be conferring a favor to the public if reports would be made to police when approached by such persons, as they are guilty of the Federal offense of impersonating officers of the United States uniformed forces."

200 Members Sought By S. E. Boys Club

The new Southeast branch of the Boys Club of Washington is looking for 200 boys between the ages of 7 and 17.

That number of registrations, said Charles M. Fyfe, director of the club, will be accepted this month to bring the total Southeast unit membership to 1,400. Boys residing in Southeast Washington and in the Northeast section bounded on the west by Tenth street and the north by Floira avenue are eligible for membership, he said.

Urging parents to enroll their sons in the club, Fyfe quoted the new slogan:

"Join the Boys Club of Washington—keep out of the dangers of traffic—be safe where you can play safe."

Visiting 'Y' Boys Win Over Campers

A group of 60 boys from the boys' department of the Central Young Men's Christian Association yesterday visited Camp Letts, the Y. M. C. A. boys camp on the Rhode River near Annapolis, Md., and won from the campers in baseball, track and field events. The campers, however, won in swimming.

In the track and field, the visiting group was victorious by a point score of 52 to 27, but bowed to the campers by a score of 53 to 37 in the swimming events. The visitors were victorious in both the senior and intermediate baseball games, but campers won at softball.

R. B. Morgan, boys' physical director, was in general charge of the group making the trip. He was assisted by W. T. Fry, E. H. Thacker and E. H. Neese, all of the "Y" staff.

Ruhland Seeking Better Ambulance Service for D. C.

Improved ambulance service is the goal of Health Officer George C. Ruhland, he disclosed yesterday, as a move to reduce the loss of life in traffic accidents.

Announcing that he would call a conference of representatives of local hospitals, Dr. Ruhland said:

"We have given considerable study to the ambulance problem, and it appears that lives have been lost which might have been saved with better service."

A co-ordination of the various ambulance services, Dr. Ruhland said, would probably be the first objective of the campaign.

The health officer pointed out that the health department has no control over the ambulance services of the city and is handicapped in aiding injured itself because it has only two ambulances and one of these is antiquated.

Associated Press WIREPHOTOS.

Whether Douglas Corrigan took time to glance down at the Statue of Liberty when he made his flight to Ireland is doubtful, but yesterday he got the thrill returning heroes are entitled to. The Manhattan is shown passing the statue amid numerous small welcoming boats, including a fireboat spraying a shower in time-honored manner.

It was a big Irish grin Corrigan flashed for photographers when the Manhattan steamed past quarantine. Note unruly lock of hair freshly slicked down.

As crowds on the pier surged about him, Corrigan raised his hands as if to caution, "Take it easy now, boys. I won't be flying away for a while. There'll be time for everything."

expected to produce 75,000 celebrants.

Today's events followed the Corrigan system. Everything was confused. First fog delayed the Manhattan so it could not be determined exactly when she would arrive at Quarantine. Sailing time for official and sightseeing boats was postponed time after time, and many that went out early merely sloshed about the Narrows for several hours. The city steamer Riverside, bearing the recently pugnacious Manhattan and Brooklyn receptions committees, waited until word finally came from the liner, and arrived on time.

The Manhattan entered the Narrows before 5:30 and by that time several dozen craft had gathered and formed two lines, between which the liner steamed toward Quarantine. All of them had their whistles shrieking hysterically, and the Manhattan bellowed majestically in response. Fireboats William J. Gaynor and James Duane threw water all over the place.

Corrigan first was sighted as the Manhattan was opposite Quarantine at 5:33 p. m. The bewildered birdman was standing on the starboard wing of the bridge, alternately waving a white handkerchief trimmed with blue and shaking his hands over his head like a pug. He wore the same leather jacket he had on during his flight, a blue shirt and a blue and gray tie. His gray flannel trousers were new. He wore the seat out of the old ones, he explained later while en route to Ireland.

Pier 59, where Corigan landed, was not unduly crowded, as only those with passes were admitted and they, for the most part, had come to meet friends or relatives. Outside, however, a crowd estimated by police between 4,000 and 5,000 persons, lined the far side of Eleventh avenue and Eighteenth street. About 300 police, who had been on hand since 2 p. m., kept exits and entrances to the pier clear.

Following his arrival Corrigan was driven to the McAlpin Hotel. He took off his coat, lounged in his room in a pale green shirt and dark trousers, and conversed with reporters. He was still insistent that he flew to Ireland by mistake.

"I hope I never make another mistake," he said earnestly.

He had no engagements for the evening, he said, and when his callers left he intended to go to bed. As to the jealousy between Manhattan and Brooklyn in extending official welcome to him, Corrigan said that it was just a misunderstanding and was settled two days ago, when Brooklyn became satisfied that it might have its own reception.

"What are your plans for the future?" somebody asked.

Corrigan grinned.

"I haven't got any immediate plans," he said. "That's the trouble with me. I never did have any aims. That's why I've been a failure, I guess."

Capt. Edward A. Richmond (lower) gives Douglas Corrigan, famed "east is west" flier, a lesson on use of the liner Manhattan's compass before the vessel reached New York yesterday afternoon. Corrigan Saw Wrong Point Of His Compass, He Explains

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Aug. 4.—It was a sad thing that happened today. Douglas Corrigan, he of the stout heart and the bad sense of direction, came home to face the music. The poor lad was mauled by greeters and photographers and then confronted a stern ring of reporters in the grand salon of the United States liner Manhattan to confess his shame in making the greatest mistake in the history of aviation. But Corrigan made a clean breast of the whole thing. In smiling abjection he, at last, admitted why he had landed in Ireland when he was headed for California.

The whole trouble, he said, was that he was looking at the wrong end of the needle on his compass. It was this, and this alone, he insisted, that sent him soaring over the good, green land of his ancestors like a wild goose winging its way over the nine green glens of Antrim. In proof this was the sole cause of his present humiliation he said he had explained the compass business to a lot of Englishmen during his stay abroad and they understood it perfectly.

From the Irish on the boats surrounding the Manhattan, a weird chant floated over the whole scene. From ten times a thousand throats echoed a mighty theme song, "C-o-double r-i-g-a-n spells Corrigan." It kept up so long that there was not a man, woman or little child who did not know the correct spelling of the name.

There was ease in Corrigan's manner and a smile on Corrigan's face and calm in his bearing as he tried to hide disgrace. He wore an old, brown leather jacket, a blue shirt, blue and gray tie and gray trousers.

"Why the jacket, Corrigan," someone shouted.

"That's so they won't tear it," he said. "They can tear a shirt but they can't tear a jacket."

Then, speaking into a battery of microphones and wearing the expression of a man who has just kissed the Blarney Stone, he accepted the congratulations. The mob cheered.

Congressional Medal Planned

Los Angeles, Aug. 4 (AP).—Representative Charles Cramer, of Los Angeles today telegraphed Douglas Corrigan in New York he will ask Congress to award him the Congressional Medal of Honor when it convenes in January.

Although Corrigan's friends ashore say he has little interest in women, there seems to be a slight twinkle in his skeptical eye as Audrey Cartledge, of London, whispered to him as the liner Manhattan bore them both toward New York. Corrigan stuck to the leather jacket he wore on his "wrong-way" flight.

Corrigan Regains Pilot Certificate

Washington, Aug. 4 (AP).—Douglas Corrigan can spread his wings again.

The Commerce Department's ban on his flying activities ended tonight. The department, to "punish" him for flying to Ireland without its approval, suspended his pilot's certificate, but the punishment worked out this way:

The suspension was ordered last Saturday, after Corigan started back aboard ship for the United States, and ended tonight, just as he had landed in the United States.

'Pact' Nations Lead in Raising Exports of U.S.

Imports From Agreement Countries Show Smaller Increase Than Others.

A Department of Commerce analysis of official foreign trade returns of the last fiscal year yesterday showed that, both in rate and amount, the increase in exports to countries with which the United States has negotiated reciprocal trade agreements has been greater than the increase in imports from them, as compared with trade indexes of the period preceding the agreements.

In the 12 months ended June 30, during the greater part of which the sales of American products abroad kept rising for a number of reasons, the report showed United States exports to the trade agreement group of countries continued to show a greater rate of increase over the preagreement period than did exports to the nonagreement countries as a whole.

Import Rise Lower.

Imports into the United States during the past fiscal year have been declining from the exceptional levels of the preceding year, and even more sharply in value than in quantity. When compared with the preagreement period, the value of imports into the United States during the fiscal year showed moderate increases of slightly lower percentage for the trade agreement group than for all other countries.

"The tendency for exports to increase more rapidly to the countries with which the United States had made trade agreements than to others began to be observed in 1936, the first year that any large number of the reciprocal agreements were in operation," the analysis said.

Percentages Analyzed.

During the calendar year of 1937, the report added, the export increase to agreement countries was 65.6 per cent, and to nonagreement countries 44.2 per cent, over the average of 1934-1935. During the 12-month period ending with June, 1938, the export increase over the 1934-1935 average was 66.2 to agreement and 47.7 to nonagreement countries.

In another Commerce Department study made public yesterday, the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce reported that export orders had been a major source of business in many lines of domestic activity during recent months when orders from within the country were curtailed.

Part of this favorable showing was ascribed to rearmament activity abroad, but increases were registered in a number of exports, such as cotton cloth, musical instruments, agricultural machinery and implements, and dental creams, that are, if at all, only remotely affected by armament programs.

New York, Aug. 4 (AP).—Reconsidering his announced intention of ignoring a subpena and sailing for Germany, George Sylvester Viereck, 53, author and publicist, said today he would remain and testify at Washington on August 18 before a Congressional committee investigating un-American activities.

The subpena, obtained by Representative Martin Dies (Democrat), Texas, chairman of the committee, was served on Viereck yesterday a few hours before he was scheduled to sail on the liner Hansa.

June Relief Cost Rose for Eighth Straight Month

For the eighth consecutive month, Social Security Board figures disclosed yesterday, costs of public relief continued to rise in June, although the increase in that month, less than 1 per cent over the May level, was the lowest recorded for any month in the period.

Total Federal, State and local costs incurred for aid to the needy in June, including earnings under the works program, amounted to $249,218,000, an increase of $1,341,000 over the total for May.

On the basis of reports received by the board, it was estimated, after allowance for duplications, that in June approximately 6,400,000 different households, probably comprising about 20,400,000 persons, received public aid.

Band Peps Up Camp Ritchie's Martial Ardor

Special Correspondence.

Camp Ritchie, Md., Aug. 4.—Martial music from the 121st Engineer Band awakened the District National Guardsmen here this morning for the first time this summer, as it turned out for its first reveille march.

Presence of the band in camp has drawn considerable commendation from those within earshot of its music. Col. John W. Oehmann, commanding the regiment, highly complimented the skill of his musicians and the smart military drill they had developed since reorganization last year.

Sergeant Directs.

Direction of the band has been temporarily taken over by Technical Sergt. H. J. Heath, until the return to duty of Warrant Officer Myer Goldman, its permanent leader. Warrant Officer Goldman, who has been chiefly responsible for the excellent organization now maintained, was transferred to the Waynesboro General Hospital today, suffering from an infected leg.

Commanding one of the largest encampments ever set up by the engineers, Col. Oehmann spoke highly of his men, saying "they have done very well for the first day in camp."

"Their few days at Camp Simms prepared them well for the encampment here and I expect them to conduct themselves with propriety and decorum both outside and within the camp area."

Parade Awaited.

Citing the excellent drilling ability of the regiment, he remarked that "they were looking forward to the most successful parade in the history of the regiment, Sunday."

The second battalion, comprising Companies D, E and F, this evening presented the regiment's first battalion drill. The drill was conducted by Maj. C. S. Shields, and reviewed by Col. Oehmann, his staff and a group of reserve officers.

The regular Marine detail here has been working all day, stripped to the waist, moving in supplies to care for the reserves due this weekend. The 23-man detachment today unloaded and transported to the encampment area two freight carloads of rations and equipment.

The Quartermaster Company, operating a truck convoy, was forced to halt it in the mountains and fill overheated radiators from canteen cups. Water was obtained from a small stream which had to be damned for the purpose before hand. A permanent motor park has been established by the transport company and transportation is being furnished the engineer troop in excellent form, according to officers in charge.

Brazil's President Dissolves Zionists As 'Political' Body

Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, Aug. 4 (U.P.).—President Getulio Vargas tonight decreed dissolution of all Zionist centers throughout Brazil.

The ministry of interior announced the centers were ordered to dissolve because the Zionist federation's activities were considered political and in violation of a recent law banning foreign political groups of any kind in this country.

The ministry said article 1 of the federation's constitution, setting forth that the "federation's principal objective is to collaborate in providing homes for Jews in Palestine" was the basis of the political charge against the organization.

Editorial Dreamer Admits Slaying of Family and Arson

Danbury, Wis., Aug. 4 (AP).—Deputy Sheriff Clifford Dietz announced this afternoon the arrest of Harlan Hopkins, 18, and his confession he killed his parents and an older brother and then burned their home near Hinckley, Minn., last night.

Dietz said the younger son confessed he shot his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hopkins, and his brother, Paul, 21, as they slept, spread fuel oil about the house and then set it afire, fleeing in the family car which was found ditched 20 miles east of the farm home.

After the boy was returned to Pine City, Minn., Sheriff Hannes Rypkema, quoted him as saying:

"I did it because it looked like I would have to stay on a farm the rest of my life. My mother was an invalid and if anybody wanted to go away I had to stay home and take care of her. I wanted to get away from farm life and become successful and edit a magazine on politics and economics."

Mine in Road Kills 6 Jews in Palestine

Jerusalem, Aug. 4 (AP).—Six Jews, two of them women, were killed and 11 were seriously injured today by a land mine explosion near Kfar Saba, in the plain of Sharon, between Samaria and the Mediterranean Sea.

The mine was buried in the road btween Ramathkovesh and Kfar Saba and was set off when it was struck by a truckload of Jewish laborers.

Treasury Studies Plan to Eliminate 'Nuisance' Taxes

By the Associated Press.

Treasury experts are studying the question of whether excise taxes should be continued or substitute taxes devised, Roswell Magill, Acting Secretary of the Treasury, indicated at his press conference yesterday.

The excise taxes—called "nuisance" taxes by many people who will have to pay them—will expire June 30, 1939, unless re-enacted. They fall on such widely used products as gasoline, automobiles, radios and refrigerators. The manufacturer pays the tax and passes it along to the consumer.

If excise taxes were to be abandoned, what would be a likely substitute? One possibility cited by Treasury experts is a general broadening of the income tax base.

Another possibility is the sales tax. If it were used, the tax would fall directly on the buyer of a product instead of being part of the price he pays.

Help Recovery By Taking Risk, Bankers Urged

But Not Reckless Hazards, Crowley Warns in FDIC Midyear Statement.

The Nation's bankers should participate in the recovery drive and must not be exclusive, Chairman Leo T. Crowley of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation warned yesterday in a semi-annual fiscal statement.

Both points were emphasized last month by Chairman Jesse Jones of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in cautioning the bankers that unless they left the "side lines" and joined in the recovery program by making more investment loans, the Government would go deeper into the banking business. Jones departed for an European vacation this week declaring his warning had been heeded and that as result, the outlook for continued economic recovery was brighter.

Yesterday, in cautioning bankers not to take excessive risks, Crowley reminded them that in the 70-year period preceding establishment of the FDIC losses in operating and closed banks totaled more than $12,000,000,000.

Not Incentive to Risks.

"Insurance of deposits does not justify bankers in taking greater risks than they otherwise would," he said. "In the long rung, the funds available to the corporation must come from the banks' earnings."

Uniform bank examination regulations recently adopted by Federal fiscal agencies emphasize the investment character of banking, Crowley said. Urging increased cooperation in eliminating unsound practices in the profession, he said:

"As in any other type of business, bankers, if they are to perform their function, must be prepared to assume some risk. But when these risks become excessive in terms of the amount of capital of the bank, or when a bank is otherwise mismanaged, it is the duty of the bank supervisor to step in and seek correction."

Crowley reported that on June 30, 1938, 13,726 commercial banks were insured with the FDIC, and that the agency had a total surplus and capital of $401,998,706.66.

Commenting on the new uniform bank examinations, Crowley stated that in the banks examined by the corporation there would be no change in the method and standards used in determining the quality of assets. "As heretofore, loans and securities will be criticized on the basis of judgment as to the ability of the obligor or debtor to repay the obligation," he stated. "The uniform procedures continue to emphasize the investment character of banking and to discourage speculation by banks in securities."

Edgerton, 58, Dies; Led Association Of Manufacturers

Lebanon, Tenn., Aug. 4 (AP).—John E. Edgerton, 58, former president of the National Association of Manufacturers, died tonight after an illness of three weeks.

Edgerton's work included management of the Lebanon, Tenn., woolen mills, of which he was president, and participation in a number of trade organizations, religious endeavors and educational enterprises.

He was made a director at large of the National Association of Manufacturers in 1916. Five years later he was elected president, being re-elected every subsequent year until 1931 when he resigned and became chairman of the board, serving for two years.

Retail Food Costs For July Declined

By the Associated Press.

Labor Department statisticians reported yesterday that retail food costs for July dropped 0.2 per cent from the preceding month and were 5.9 per cent lower than July a year ago.

The decline in the average resulted principally, the department said, from a 7.6 per cent decrease in the cost of fresh fruits and vegetables. Commissioner Lubin, of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, said, however, the average cost of meat advanced 2.5 per cent and eggs registered a 7.2 per cent increase.

Dancing Masters Name D. C. Man National Chief

LEROY H. THAYER.

Leroy H. Thayer, of 6435 Barnaby street northwest, proprietor of a Washington dancing school, was elected president of the Dancing Masters of America at its convention in New Orleans yesterday. Election was by acclamation, Leo Kohl, of Madison, Wis., only other candidate, having withdrawn.

Thayer was accompanied to the convention by his wife and their two sons, Leroy, jr., and Jack. He was elected first vice president of the organization last year at its Washington convention.

A strong bid was being made by the New York delegation to take the convention there in 1939 during the World's Fair. Pittsburgh and Detroit delegations were exerting pressure for their cities.

The convention, which opened yesterday, had a registration of only 500, less than half the number present at Washington. The highlight of the week is the Mardi Gras carnival ball, which is being repeated by one of the New Orleans organizations for the dancing masters. The convention will end tonight with a banquet and dance.

Kiss Does Not Halt Jackie Coogan Suit

Hollywood, Aug. 4 (U.P.).—Jackie Coogan and his estranged mother, principals in a hostile battle for control of his shrunken movie fortune, embraced in a lawyer's office late today during an intermission in a deposition hearing. Trial of the case has been set for November.

It was a kiss of affection, not of peace, Jackie explained hastily when bombarded with questions as to whether the embrace meant he and Mrs. Lillian Coogan Bernstein would reconcile their bitter differences. He said he would continue his suit.

Judge Orders Cut In Pay of Railroad

Rutland, Vt., Aug. 4 (U.P.).—Employes of the bankrupt Rutland Railroad have been ordered by United States District Judge Harland B. Howe to accept pay reductions ranging from 10 to 30 per cent or quit their jobs.

Under protest, the workers agreed to this measure, designed to keep the railroad operating until settlement of a wage dispute. The road's receiver said workers would be paid 70 to 90 per cent of their weekly wages, the balance to go to them if and when the road's earnings warranted.

'Sailing,' Flynn Reported in Reno

Hollywood, Aug. 4 (AP).—The whereabouts of screen star Errol Flynn and his plans for the next few weeks interested the film capital tonight after reports from Reno, Nev., that he had appeared in Nevada's divorce capital.

Flynn left his studio, Warner Brothers, and his beautiful wife, Lili Damita, early yesterday, saying he was going to charter a boat and sail down the Mexican west coast to determine what had become of his yacht, Sirocco.

20,000,000 Get Relief In Nation During June

The Social Security Board estimated yesterday that more than twenty million people received Government relief funds in June.

"Costs of public relief in June continued the rise recorded for the eight previous months," it was announced, "but the increase was the lowest recorded for any of these months. Total Federal, State and local costs incurred for the aid of the needy in June, including earnings under the Works Program, amounted to $249,218,000, an increase of $1,341,000, or less than one per cent over the total for May."

Corner Parking Arrests Halted Pending a Test

Brown Orders 'Warnings' Only Until Case Is Settled.

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, yesterday ordered discontinuance of all arrests for violations of the new 20-feet-from-building lines parking regulation.

Pending decision in a "test" case now under consideration by Traffic Court Judge Walter J. Casey, Brown told policeman to ignore infractions and merely warn motorists against parking. Previously, Judge Casey had instructed the corporation counsel's office to withhold prosecution of offenders until he rules on the law's validity.

Brown's order followed a conference with Vernon West, acting corporation counsel. The order, addressed to precinct commanders, read:

"You will instruct members of your command until further orders not to make arrests of operators of cars parked within 20 feet of the building line, but they will place warning notices on these cars."

Heated controversy over the new rule arose Wednesday when the American Automobile Association presented a "test" case to Judge Casey and asked for an opinion as to the regulation's validity.

It was contended the motoring public was not familiar with the meaning of three yellow lines painted along curbing to denote the restriction and that the law was "unreasonable" in that a building line was not defined.

The A. A. A. pointed to "glaring irregularities" as the ban is applied in various sections of the city and demanded it be revised or abolished.

Haven Is Asked For 650,000 Nazi Refugees

Special Cable to The Post.

London, Aug. 4.—Resettlement abroad of 650,000 political refugees from Germany and Austria was set before the intergovernmental committee as its task within the next five years by Myron C. Taylor, chief American delegate, at the group's second meeting at the foreign office in London today. The committee then adjourned until August 15 to await arival of the permanent director, George Rublee, Washington lawyer.

For the next few months, Taylor, assisted by Robert Pell, of the American State Department, who has been granted a year's leave to serve as assistant director of the committee under Rublee, will negotiate with various nations in an effort to find room for the refugees. It is understood Rublee will concentrate on seeking an agreement with Berlin under which emigrants from Germany and Austria will be allowed to retain a portion of their property or income perhaps 20 per cent, when they seek new homes abroad.

Would Speed Task.

Such an agreement would facilitate the committee's task, since most countries willing to take refugees require them to have a minimum amount of money as a safeguard against their becoming public charges.

In an attempt to ascertain how many refugees can be absorbed by the 32 nations represented on the committee, Lord Winterton, head of the British delegation and chairman of the conference, pressed today for definite information from each country as to what it was prepared to do.

In order to insure the co-operation on the refugees' services of the League of Nations and the International Labor Office at Geneva, the committee decided today to assign Sir Neill Malcolm, the League's high commissioner for refugees, and John Winant, American director of the I. L. O., to be represented at the committee's meetings.

Split Denied.

Reports of a serious split behind the scenes between the American and British delegations in their policy toward refugees, were denied today by Taylor. According to the reports, the United States would open its doors to political enemies of the Nazi regime, as well as those forced to leave on racial grounds; while the British were said to be shy of admitting any but racial refugees.

The split was said to have arisen from an unofficial intimation Germany would allow Jews leaving Germany to bring out 10 per cent of their wealth, as long as the committee barred Hitler's sworn enemies from finding a haven.

The annual expenses of the committee were set today at a maximum of $50,000. Rublee's salary, as director, will be $15,000.

Abernethy Retires; Had Served Nation In Army Since 1897

BRIG. GEN. ABERNETHY.

After graduating in 1897 from West Point he served a year at military posts in California and then went to the Philippines where he participated with the American forces in action against the Filipino insurgents. He was awarded the Silver Star in recognition of his gallantry on three occasions during the insurrection.

Before the World War Gen. Abernethy was instructor at West Point and then was on duty as artillery engineer of the Chesapeake Bay District with headquarters at Fort Monroe, Va. He also was commander of Fort Hunt, Va., a student at the Army War College and assistant to the chief of Coast Artillery before the United States entered the war.

In France Gen. Abernethy commanded the Third Field Artillery Brigade during the Meuse-Argonne offensive of 1918.

Upon his return to the United States he was placed in command of the harbor defenses of Long Island and then was president of the Coast Artillery Board, Fort Monroe, Va. He was commander of the harbor defenses of Pearl Harbor, T. H., for a year beginning in 1929 and was again on duty in Hawaii at Fort DeRussy from 1932 until 1936. He assumed command of the San Francisco Port of Embarkation in January, 1937.

Loyalists Flee Gandesa; 5,000 Reported Dead

Insurgents Hold Siege Is Lifted; River Traps Foreign Brigades.

By the United Press.

Hendaye, France, Aug. 4.—Gen. Franco's African Moors and Navarrese shock troops have wiped out more than 5,000 foreign volunteers of the loyalist international brigades and lifted the government's siege of Gandesa along the Catalonian boundary in eastern Spain, insurgent dispatches said tonight.

The government announced later that 100 miles to the southwest its troops, driving upon the shell-shattered city of Teruel from the south and west had "captured all objectives" in the Universales Mountains and were closing in on the gateway town of Albarracin.

The loyalist offensive in the Teruel zone, dismissed by the insurgents as "an infiltering by a few loyalist units that were quickly mopped up by nationalist cavalry," is designed to strike at the rear and disorganize Franco's forces moving upon Sagunto and Valencia, along the Mediterranean coast.

Insurgent headquarters at Saragossa, describing a rout of the government offensive in the Gandesa zone along the Ebro Valley, said two of the four international brigades that swarmed across the Ebro and to the gates of Gandesa, only to find themselves marooned from their bases, had been annihilated.

As result, Saragossa communiques said, the remants of the government forces had been pushed back from Gandesa and were attempting to save a part of their gains nearer the Ebro, 20 miles to the east.

The heaviest fighting occurred around Fayon, 16 miles north of Gandesa, where the loyalists attempted to storm insurgent positions, but were driven off, leaving 300 dead on the slopes.

Mexico Facing Money's Flight, Sen. Lewis Says

Present Policy May Cause U.S. Capital to Withdraw, Nation Warned.

By the Associated Press.

Senator Lewis (Democrat), Illinois, said last night that Mexico's present policy might result in the withdrawal of all United States capital from that country and the termination of this Government's purchases of Mexican silver.

Lewis, a member of the Senate Committee on foreign relations, made the statement in an interview after the Mexican government had rejected Secretary Hull's proposal for arbitration of claims growing out of the seizure of American farm lands in Mexico.

The Senator predicted that President Roosevelt would issue a statement on the situation in Panama.

"The policy of Mexico may disrupt all treaties now existing between the two friendly countries," Lewis told reporters, "and create enmities which will compel all United States capital to withdraw from Mexico and our Government to cease buying silver from the country which we have been doing in great sums to the enrichment of Mexico."

Shortly after the Mexican government seized American owned oil properties, several months ago, the United States Treasury abandoned a policy of promising to buy a given amount of Mexican silver each month. It continued, however, to buy Mexican silver offered on the New York market. The silver purchases have provided employment in Mexican mines and given Mexico the means to buy goods in this country.

Withholding all comment, Secretary Hull, Undersecretary Sumner Welles, legal and Latin-American experts began a close study of the reply.

Persons close to the State Department expressed belief American insistence on arbitration was prominent among several courses open for action. They said it was "not impossible" that this Government would accept conditionally President Cardenas' counterproposal for new direct negotiations to fix the value of the lands and method of payments.

3,000 Chinese Held Trapped NearHangchow

All Guerrillas in Area Are Facing Annihilation, Japanese Declare.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai (Friday), Aug. 5.—A band of 3,000 Chinese guerrillas was reported surrounded and facing annihilation today by Japanese forces in the Hangchow area, 100 miles southwest of Shanghai, territory nominally under Japanese control.

A Japanese army spokesman said additional scattered guerrilla forces had been crushed in that sector and that the Chinese hit-and-run campaign there was doomed to speedy termination.

Chinese military leaders reported their mobile forces were dealing increased punishment to the invaders moving up the Yangtze River toward Hankow, provisional capital, and in other main centers of combat.

Floods Aid Chinese.

Yangtze River floods aided the Chinese, who said dikes broken by rising waters 30 miles above Kiukiang had inundated large areas and threatened to block the Japanese advance.

At Hangchow, eastern coastal port city at the mouth of Hangchow Bay, Japanese troops posted machine-gun guards around the British-operated Church Missionary Society Hospital and removed 103 wounded Chinese soldiers.

Hospital authorities told the British Embassy the Japanese in doing so failed to recognize the British flag and violated a written agreement providing that the wounded should remain in the institution for the duration of the war.

Air Victory Claimed.

Chinese combat planes yesterday shot down 12 Japanese planes when a squadron of about 70 Japanese planes attacked the Wuhan area, according to a statement issued by the Chinese Embassy here. Later the Chinese bombers raided Anking Airfield, destroying a number of Japanese planes aground and sinking one Japanese warship near Anking and damaging several others.

McCoy Show Sale Brought $29,412; Horses Pull Most

Receipt of $29,412 was realized on the forced sale here of the property of the Col. Tim McCoy & Associates, Inc., wild west show, it was revealed in District Court yesterday. A final report of Receivers Edmund M. Toland and William H. Collins showed that sale of the show's horses netted $24,390. Disbursements of $7,353 were listed, with $1,000 to each receiver.

Justice James M. Proctor signed an order making the report subject to the jurisdiction of the Delaware Federal courts, the State in which the show was incorporated. Already $22,059 has been transferred to the Equitable Trust Co., of Wilmington, Del.

The show was adjudged a bankrupt here June 2, and because of the enormous overhead, such as feeding animals, renting ground and taking care of the equipment, it was speedily placed on sale. Last of the circus was sold at auction by Adam Weschler & Son several days ago when the less valuable equipment was disposed of.

Carroll Ruined Own Daughter, Dwyer Says, And Then Forbade Her to Marry True Love

Carroll

I mentioned it to her next day and she told me not to feel bad. Then she burst out crying and said, 'Now you know why I hate my father.'"

Later, Dwyer was quoted, he received "four or five letters from Barbara saying her father had 'terribly assaulted her' when she was 13 or 14 years old."

"When Barbara knew what was going on," Chapman continued reading, "she threatened to tell her mother about it and thus put a stop to the nightmares."

After Carroll went South last summer with another daughter, Betty, 14, Dwyer said, he talked with the girl and got the "idea that Mr. Carroll was up to his old tricks again."

He forgot all about the letters, Dwyer wrote, until two weeks before the murder of Dr. Littlefield, who was slain on October 13.

Tells of Threat.

Then, he said, "I got a letter telling me that I had some letters that were doing me no good and that this person would be willing to pay well for them."

If he were interested in the offer, Dwyer was quoted, he was to write to "John Someone, General Delivery, Lewiston, Me."

"A day or two later," the confession continued, "I received a second letter threatening my 'good health' if I dodn't answer satisfactorily within the next two days."

He returned to Paris Hill, Dwyer was quoted as writing, and was walking to his porch when "someone across the street . . . took a shot at me. I let out a yell and dropped.

Several days later, Dwyer related, he met Carroll in South Paris Square.

"I said, 'Fran, you sort of missed me the other night, didn't you?' Naturally, he couldn't imagine what I meant. I skipped that and came to the point.

"I Hope You're Satisfied."

"'Also, Fran, you can trust that you will never get those letters,'" I said. Then he seemed to remember. Right out of the blue he said, 'I hope you're satisfied what you've done to Barbara.'

"I asked him what that was. He said she was pregnant and was blaming me. I could smell about four different kinds of rats there. First, I hadn't been intimate with Barb for long over a year; second, I had good reason to believe that no one else had since we broke up; third, Barb would never have told him about it; fourth, if she ever thought she was, I believe she would have come to me for advice."

Dwyer said he decided to "play kitty."

"'If she is, what can I do about it?' I asked. He stuck his head out of the hole. 'Now that you mention those letters I see a way out for you.'

"I said, 'What if I choose to marry the girl?' He would not allow it, but if I'd give him the letters, he'd see that it didn't cost mother anything and she'd never know.

"I could have laughed right in his face, but I decided to play along and even then thinking up the little trick which would show him up in good shape, but which has instead during the course of events guaranteed my board and feed for the rest of my life, so I said, 'Okay, Fran, you bring Barb up to the house Wednesday night and we'll talk this over.' He didn't like the idea, but he finally agreed to."

Chapman stopped reading the prison-cell confession at this point and had not resumed when court adjourned for the day.

Earlier, however, Dwyer had testified he had confided to Dr. Littlefield the contents of the letters and brought him to the Dwyer house the night of October 13.

Doctor Strangled.

Carroll came to the house the same night, Dwyer said, and when Dr. Littlefield threatened to expose him as the violator of his own daughter, Carroll bludgeoned and strangled the physician.

Dwyer also testified that Carroll strangled Mrs. Littlefield when she attempted to accuse him to his face of murdering her husband. Dwyer originally confessed the murder of Mrs. Littlefield, but never was tried for that crime. Likewise, Carroll has not been charged with it.

He testified that he confessed to the murders when he was arrested last October 16 in North Arlington, N. J., in a car containing both bodies only because he wanted "to get out of New Jersey and go back to Maine and see Mr. Carroll."

Once returned to South Paris, however, Dwyer said Carroll visited him and "told me to keep my mouth shut." He did so "up to a certain time," he said, because he feared for his life. It was for the same reason, he testified, that he had agreed to dispose of the bodies.

During 5½ hours of cross-examination today and 3½ hours yesterday, Dwyer clung tenaciously to his story that he is serving a life sentence unjustly for a murder committed by Carroll.

Only once, apparently, did Chapman catch the youthful convict in a discrepancy. That was in the method allegedly used by Carroll to strangle Mrs. Littlefield. Yesterday Dwyer testified that Carroll used his "bare hands" but today he declared that the defendant borrowed his belt to garrote the woman.

Shirley's Finger Hurt, She Cries

Boston, Aug. 4 (AP).—Shirley Temple, 9-year-old motion picture star, shed a few tears today when three of her fingers were squeezed in the door of a limousine. Her physician, Dr. Leo Madson, said the injury was not serious and smiles soon replaced the tears.

The accident occurred at the Boston Navy Yard, at the conclusion of a visit to the historic frigate Constitution.

Previously, Shirley had retraced Paul Revere's famous route and eagerly visited other points of historical interest.

Location Perils Valiantly Met By Famous Wit

Noted Author, Now Actor, Writes a Column for Fred Othman.

By Irvin S. Cobb.
Written for the United Press.

Hollywood, Aug. 4.—Being on location has one advantage, anyhow—it keeps you out in the air. Being a seagull does the same thing. But who in thunder wants to be a seagull?

We're up here, a gallant, desperate little band of us, on the shores of Lake Malibu making "The Arkansas Traveler," for Paramount, which is a concern that's always willing to take a chance. A radio set figures in the story, but the real plot is a concealed deadly bazooka. About once in so often Bob Burns is overcome by a baser impulse and hauls it out, but then he better nature reasserts itself and he slips it back into his voluminous hip pocket, and the peril is averted. Thus the picture progresses toward a happy climax.

Whoever wrote the script must have loved to gargle the language, because about every other paragraph we run into a word that has 14 rattles and a button.

Beal's Tongue-Twister.

For example, today Johnnie Beal, who is playing the juvenile lead—with the aid of makeup—was called on to wrestle with a line of conversation that made him sound like a Swiss yodler badly out of practice.

In one sentence he had to deal with "tetrode buffer amplifiers" and "polyphase thyratron rectifiers." It seems these phrases are customarily used by builders of radio stations—which perhaps explains why such officials draw such large salaries. They not only must know what these infernal devices are, but also have to learn to pronounce them.

Johnnie, who is rapidly developing into a linguist right here on the spot, got along all right with the tetrode buffer amplifiers by tucking up the loose ends and slipping them under tonsils, but polyphase thyratron rectifiers wrapped their deadly tentacles around him, and we had to run in and cut him out with bush hooks.

Bob Lives His Role.

Bob plays the part of a sort of wanderer, and has carried realism so far that sometimes when he is needed for a shot he has wandered all the way down to the cozy igloo he is building 30 miles from here, and has to be brought in by dog sled across the snow-covered steppes of the frigid San Fernando Valley, where at this season of the year one has to keep a spirit thermometer on ice, or otherwise it would become hardboiled.

It is a joy, whether one is a beginner or a professional, to watch Miss Fay Bainter work. How the woman gets such tremendous dramatic effects with such beautiful economy of motion, is a constant marvel to me. Some of these rising stars around Hollywood should avoid exposure to Miss Bainter. They're liable to catch the art of acting from her.

I might state that, although practically a beginner and a novice in this large loose art called acting for the movies, I am rapidly acquiring certain essential phases of technique. For example, I have learned to hog the lens—and this is considerable of a feat, when I am having spirited competition every minute.

No Spinach Worry For Kids of 1904

Youngsters in 1904 didn't have to eat spinach.

Dr. Herman Lissauer, head of Warner Bros. research department, brought that fact to light when Milton Krims wrote a line of dialogue for "The Sisters" which read: "He's the one who looks like he ate all the spinach."

Lissauer's check-up revealed that spinach was not generally used in 1904. "Certainly it was not as popular then, if you want to call it popular, as it has become in recent years," he informed Krims. "I hardly think such a remark would have passed in 1904."

High Voltage Aid To Love Making

Perc Westmore, head of the studio make-up department, has added electric vibrators to the standard equipment of his make-up artists and hairdressers.

Before heavy emotional scenes, players get brisk vibrator treatments on the set. The gadgets help to banish late afternoon lethargy and heat fatigue. They are also used to relax strained nerves after tense scenes.

Introduced on the "Brother Rat" set where Wayne Morris and Priscilla Lane, former sweethearts, are making screen love, the idea proved so effective it was adopted throughout the studio.

Nelson B. Bell About The Showshops

'Letter of Introduction' Proves A Smash Hit on Keith's Screen!

Story, Cast and Production Offer a Unique Combination of Hilarity and Drama; an Icicle Drops Off; Adelaide Hibbard at Olney; Notes of the Theater.

AS WAS A forgone conclusion in the minds of those who had previewed it, "Letter of Introduction" scored an overwhelming hit yesterday when it was presented for the first time on any public screen in Washington, at RKO-Keith's Theater.

BELL.

There is ample reason for this enthusiastic audience response to the peculiarly effective combination of comedy, tense drama and tragic grief that Universal has wrought in this adaptation by Sheridan Gibney and Leonard Spigelgass of an original story by Bernice Boone. John M. Stahl's flawless direction adds to the picture's grip on the emotions and its tickling of the risibilities, emphasizing the skill with which it spans the poles of dramatic expression from hilarious fun to the somber depths of despair.

The opening scenes are laid in a cheap New York theatrical boarding house, where new friendships and sudden attachments are made between struggling aspirants for "big time" stage recognition, down on their luck. Into this group comes Kay Martin, armed with a "letter of introduction" to the reigning screen idol of the day, the last of a famous family of the theater, who lives in a rarified atmosphere of public idolatry, matrimonial marathons, egotism and a carefully guarded consciousness that he is growing old. Kay is sure that he will see her. Her friends humor her anxiety to launch what they are confident is the merest wild goose chase. The secret blood relationship existing between Kay and the fabulous John Mannering is made the foundation of the play's underlying drama of hope, frustration and pathos.

Not only does he grant her an audience, but eventually agrees to appear opposite her in her stage debut, in the theater where he and his father and his father's father have triumphed before the creme de la creme of Gotham society. Mannering's addiction to the bottle, however, undoes all of these valiant plans and brings a gallant gesture to a tragic end.

In the meantime, a counterplot involving the careers of all of Kay's less fortunate friends and her harassed betrothal to Barry Paige, loved desperately by his dancing partner, is going gaily forward, with Charlie McCarthy and his sagacious mentor, Edgar Bergen, leading the way to hurricanes of laughter and many others contributing to the lighter side of an unusually deft piece of celluloid dramaturgy.

The manner in which Bergen is able to imbue his voluble and convulsing wooden dummy with all of the essential attributes of a living actor is one of the miracles of the modern theater. In this subject, Charlie McCarthy, despite the raillery aimed at him in the dialogue—obviously, or seemingly so, fashioned by Edgar Bergen himself—assumes the stature of an animate player; grotesque in appearance to be sure, but carrying a definite measure of the film's comic and dramatic appeal. He flirts outrageously with the girls, advises or chides his male associates, as the whim of the moment and the requirements of the plot suggest, and only encounters discomfiture once. That is when Mr. Bergen produces another character he has whittled out of a pine log, in the person of Mortimer, the gawky young agriculturist who gives Charlie a few unhappy moments by topping his comedy. You could roll all of the other ventriloquists into one and you still would not have another Edgar Bergen.

But these unique artists—the temptation to pluralize Mr. Bergen is too strong to resist—by no means "steal" the picture. Andrea Leeds and Adolphe Menjou, in the roles of Kay Martin and John Mannering, contribute portrayals that equal anything either ever has done in sound character delineation. George Murphy, the ardent young hoofer, whose love seems futile until the final fadeout, plays the romantic lead naturally and effectively, without ever dancing a step. Rita Johnson, as Honey, his partner, is no less an asset to the picture's substantial moments. On the comedy side, and occasionally the dramatic, forceful performances are given by a long list of others, led by Eve Arden, Ann Sheridan, Ernest Cossart, Jonathan Hale, Richard Tucker, Theodore Von Eltz and William Davidson, many of whom are called by their own names in the dialogue.

It is to be hoped, for your own enjoyment, that this letter of introduction to "Letter of Introduction" will be as potent as the one in the picture.

"Letter of Introduction," by the way, is so complete in itself that only two short supplementary films are included in the bill. They are "Polar Trapper" and a new issue of the Pathe News. In "Polar Trapper," one of Walt Disney's best cartoon comedies, Donald Duck and Goofy go hunting in the Antarctic with no appreciable luck until Donald disguises himself as a penguin and goes a-wooing. Write your own ticket!

Well, well, well. So Margaret Sullavan DID arrive in Washington a little after 6 last evening and, so I am told, devastatingly and frigidly lived uy to the best traditions of her temperamental aloofness. To avoid attention, Miss Sullavan was last to leave her plane, whisked past Manager Ford of the airline without so much as a "howja do," declined the advances of such representatives of the press as were on hand and sped away in a motor car, awaiting her.

Later in the evening, the young actress who scored so efficiently in "Three Comrades" and "The Shopworn Angel" attended a showing of "Love Finds Andy Hardy," at the Palace and then boarded the 10:30 outbound plane for the West Coast, under the transparent "incognito" of "Mrs. Leland Hayward."

This column was not among those who hastened to the airport to greet Miss Sullavan upon her arrival. Having once interviewed this volatile young woman over long distance phone, with an aftermath of inflammatory correspondence, it was forewarned that she holds the press and "her public" in something more than mild contempt and knew what to expect. Too bad I wasn't wrong.

The following night letter, reposing on our immaculate desk when we got in early yesterday morning at 2 p. m., is self-explanatory:

"To provide spectacular opening for our new movie season, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer today agreed to forego roadshow engagements of 'Marie Antoinette' in your city and permit our theater to present it at the usual popular prices, opening about August 26 or September 1. It will play at advanced prices, two-a-day, at the Astor Theater, New York, starting August 16. Metro's decision comes as the producers' gesture toward the industry's new movie season campaign. Looks like a big year ahead. Regards. OSCAR DOOB, Loew's Theaters."

Very welcome news, Oscar. Now about that "Gone With the Wind" . . .

It will be welcome news to her many friends in Washington that Adelaide Hibbard, for many seasons the revered character actress with the National Theater Players, will be importantly cast with Dorothy Mackaill in "Personal Appearance" next week, out at Panjandrum, Stephen E. Cochran's new Olney Theater.

Mrs. Hibbard, widow of a former mayor of the city of Boston, probably endeared herself to theatergoers of the Capital beyond the measure of any other continuing member of the National Players during their decade of activity. Her presence in the cast with Miss Mackaill should be enough to pack the Olney throughout the forthcoming week.

In a contest held Wednesday night by Radio Station WJSV to select the best impersonator of ZaSu Pitts, who was headlining at the Earle, the famed screen comedienne emerged a poor second. Entered under the name of Irma Lait, of Charlotte, N. C., Miss Pitts was topped by Virginia O'Neill, 1667 Wisconsin avenue northwest. Miss Pitts received 68 votes to Miss O'Neill's 79. Alma Browning, Alexandria, Va., was third with 23 votes and Sally Smith of the skating act appearing at the Earle, copped fourth place.

This reminds me of the time, years ago, when the late Bert Williams was inveigled into entering a similar contest among his impersonators down at the old Miner's Bowery Theater, in New York. Bert didn't even come in second. He was booed down and "given the hook" almost before he got started—much to the chagrin of the audience when they found out later who he was.

So cheer up, ZaSu, it might have been worse!

Keeping-the-Record-Straight Note

In that last line, I was referring to the stupidity, not the humidity.

Stars Battle Heat Wave in Odd Ways

Even as you and I, the Hollywood stars get hot under the collar when the sun begins to beat down as it has been doing, so, at their commissary luncheon table they exchanged ideas on how to keep cool.

Here are their methods:

Myrna Loy: Tap a chilled kerchief to the wrists.

Mickey Rooney: Don't wear underwear "tops."

Jeanette MacDonald: Drink ice water.

Robert Taylor: Go through a heavy workout, then rest for a half hour.

But Greta Garbo, seems to have the best idea:

Go to Sweden!

Van Dyke Likened To Dentist's Gas

Working with W. S. Van Dyke is exactly the same experience as taking gas at the dentist's, declared Herman Bing as he completed his role in "Sweethearts," the first picture in which he has appeared with this director.

"You step before the camera, just as if you were stepping up to the dentist's chair," explained the commedian. "Van Dyke hypnotizes you and you don't know a thing that has happened until you come to, just as though you were coming out of the anesthetic. In the case of the dentist's office, the tooth is out. In the case of Van Dyke, the scene for this Jeanette MacDonald - Nelson Eddy musical is shot.

"Van Dyke steps up to you, pats you on the shoulder, says 'thank you, it's all over, you can go home.

"The only difference between Van and the dentist is that the latter's parting words are, 'I'll mail you the bill.' Van Dyke just says 'print it.'"

If This Is Love, It's Got Him!

MICKEY ROONEY AND LANA TURNER

The Post's New Yorker

New York, Aug. 4.

BING CROSBY is expressing no concern over Al Smith's speeches. Crosby, however, bears a definite relationship to those speeches . . . Some months ago Bing Crosby rushed to his New York dentist, and hurriedly demanded a plate. The dentist realized the emergency, and used a second-hand plate for the singer's dental work. Crosby doesn't know it—but that plate once belonged to Al Smith.

HARPO MARX was being driven by his chauffeur along a road on the outskirts of Hollywood. The car hit 70 miles an hour, when a traffic cop appeared and prepared to issue a summons. "You'd better not give Mr. Marx a summons," the chauffeur warned the policeman. . . . "Why not?" the cop demanded . . . "Because," was the austere reply "he may not choose to ride this road again!"

THEY TOLD IT at dinner tendered to Joe Phillips, the comic . . . Charlie Foy, offspring of Eddie Foy, was offered a one-day booking in Elizabeth. "I'd like to take the job," he said, "but I've got a dinner appointment for that night. Get somebody else. Foy's dinner appointment was at the home of Phillips. He arrived early, waited, and waited—until midnight . . . The dinner long had been cold, when Phillips arrived. "Sorry I had to be late," Joe apologized, "but I just finished a turn—in Elizabeth."

THEY NEVER BUILT a shrine to the memory of Raymond Hood, the eminent architect who passed away not so long ago. It was Hood, however, who enshrined himself . . . on the upper floor of a Greenwich Village cafe . . . Upstairs, at Mori's on Bleeker street, is one of the most elegant cocktail rooms in all America. It was designed by Hood while he still was engrossed in building Radio City. Once, before fame had touched him, Raymond Hood lived in that room. A penniless dreamer, he had come to Paul Mori . . . imbued with ambition and limitless faith. "Use the room upstairs for your work," the restauranteur invited. "It's the only room which has a southern exposure." And there, for years, the architect worked and dreamed his dreams. A thousand tomorrows paraded into the past, and Hood's overdue rent totaled $14,000. One afternoon he came to Mori and asked to borrow $150. "I just won some sort of prize in Chicago," Hood explained, "and I need the money for fare—and a tuxedo." His benefactor staked him to that sum, and the architect left for Chicago. Three days later Raymond Hood returned—with the $50,000 certified check donating the Chicago Tribune Prize . . . He placed the check upon the table in front of Paul Mori. "Here," he said, "Give me $36,000 change."

NELSON ALDRICH ROCKEFELLER has discovered a new way of disposing of the insurance-agent problem which always bedevils a bearer of the Rockefeller name . . . He makes no effort to avoid them. In fact, when an agent calls, he gets a warm reception.. "Do I want life insurance?" Rockefeller tells them. "Sure I want life insurance. But" . . . and that's the noninsurable but which dashes their hopes, "but I warn you, I fly my own plane."

MONDAY afternoon she stationed herself at the money order window of the Forty-third street postoffice branch . . . The clerk was adamant and refused to cash her money order unless she had proper identification. The girl ransacked her bag for a card or a letter or anything that would ease her predicament, in vain. She turned to go, did this pretty Miss, and her eyes glared at the poster advising the purchase of United States Savings bonds. In the center of that poster was presented a Miss Liberty, holding her torch aloft . . . "And I," she told Sammy Byrd, who was next in line, "and I posed for that picture!"

WALTER FRIEDMAN, the flight manager who brought Primo Carnera to America, still is trying to promote money to go to China to import the 8-foot Oriental of whom he had heard. Friedman believes that China is a small suburb of Dave's Blue Room, and has no idea of where his Chinese Goliath lives—except "somewhere in China" . . .

In Hollywood

With HEDDA HOPPER

Hollywood, Aug. 4.—After planning Richard Connell's "What Ho" for Gary Cooper and Bing Crosby, it's finally agreed, after two years, that it will be Harold Lloyd's newest starring picture. It's a "natural" for him. One of the funniest stories I ever read.

HEDDA HOPPER

I hope they'll build the quiet sixteenth century village of Dunstan, England, where story was laid, with old castle on hilltop. Ann Harding and I toured through there summer before last, at Jane Cowl's suggestion, and ordered tea in the garden. But bees, the like of which you've never seen, took over before we could taste it!

Our royal film couples who announce their heartbreaking divorces, and go out dancing together, cheek to cheek a few nights later, should take a page out of Harold Lloyd's private life. He adds dignity—they come along and tear down everything he stands for. Not alone bad pictures, but people in them that give the rest of the world a chance to laugh at Hollywood. Nothing kills faster than ridicule.

When you hear the shock of battle on September 23, you'll know it's the United States Navy on parade and going through war maneuvers with their ships and 450 planes in air—all for the Legionnaires, at Long Beach. Jack Warner, head of entertainment committee, has the first studio party all planned. Legionnaires 8,000 strong on Monday, September 19, will leave their hotels by bus for a tour through the entire Warner Studio—still by bus—with stars and players waving to them as they pass through. Then on to Warner's ranch, where they can let down their hair and go into a picnic.

Tyrone Power given a new contract. He didn't ask for a raise, but for fewer pictures at the same salary. Smart business any way you look at it.

When Claire Trevor married Clark Andrews, she ended her picture career, at least for the time being. Said she was going to learn something about this wife business before going back to work. This, in spite of an offer of $25,000 a picture from Warners. However, she'll be back on the air with Eddie Robinson at a salary not to be sneezed at.

Much married Nancy Bill wants the job of technical adviser on "Life Begins at Reno." She ought to know.

It was a minute and a half which took Jose Iturbi off and out of "Sweethearts." He had worked out four and a half minutes of music. The studio said: "No—you can only have three." He didn't stop to kiss them as he said good-by.

And a strip of bad dialogue had the "Three Loves Has Nancy" company waiting for the return of Bob Montgomery when he walked out.

Every director at Metro is fighting for Truman Bradley, late of the Ford hour, because his face matches his voice. Looks as though Van Dyke would win, by getting him for the doctor in "Northwest Passage."

Regret that Metro and Fannie Brice have canceled their contract. Hope this doesn't mean she'll be off the air as "Baby Snooks."

Whitney Bourne was given a new car when the company discovered it was a broken steering knuckle which caused her accident.

"The Dead End" kids were minus their ringleader, Leo Gorcy, at the policemen's show. Leo said: "They didn't give me any benefits the five days I spent in jail for speeding."

Quite a sight seeing those kids and Errol Flynn keeping cool swimming round "Blackwell's Island" in the tank built for the picture. It gets fresh water every third day and costs $300 to fill it. But they swim free.

Metro has 11 pictures lined up for Mickey Rooney this coming year, which is a crying shame. He'll be worn out before he reaches manhood.

Contract Is Won By Young Actress

Ruth Hussey, dark-haired beauty who was given her first lead at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios in "Rich Man, Poor Girl," after a year of grooming in bits, clicked to such an extent in her first big opportunity that she has been signed to a new contract.

Stage and Screen.

Janet Gaynor is the only player in "Three Loves Has Nancy" who didn't act on Broadway. Robert Montgomery, Franchot Tone, Reginald Owen, Cora Witherspoon and Guy Kibbee all have stage backgrounds

'Shoot Way In' Plans Revealed By Nonstrikers

Troops Prevented Piercing of Steel Picket Line, Inquiry Is Told.

By the Associated Press.

The Senate Civil Liberties Committee received testimony yesterday that only the arrival of National Guardsmen prevented non-striking employes from carrying out an intention to shoot their way through the picket lines, if nesessary, during last year's "Little Steel" strike at Youngstown, Ohio.

The committee's witness was Ray Thomas, Youngstown attorney, who testified that he had advised the workers to arm themselves, gave revolvers to some of them and encouraged the proposal to break through the lines and go back to work.

"It was generally understood that we were going in, if we had to go in shooting," he asserted with a vigorous gesture.

Interviewed Pickets.

Thomas gave his advice and counsel to the non-striking workers as attorney for the Brier Hill Employes Association, plant union of a Youngstown mill. In that post, he said, he did much work, and never received or asked any compensation.

While organizing his back-to-work movement, he said, he was busy in other ways. He interviewed pickets and picket captains.

"I told them we were going in, and that when we did, not to cause any trouble but to march in with us," he said, adding later "we had those picket lines weakened so that it would have been no trouble for us to go in at all."

"What preparations had you made?" Chairman La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin, of the investigating committee, asked.

"These steel men were going in there armed," Thomas replied.

The attorney volunteered the statement that "the impression was rampant" in Youngstown that he was subsidized by the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. or by the Republic Steel Corporation. He denied emphatically that the impression was correct.

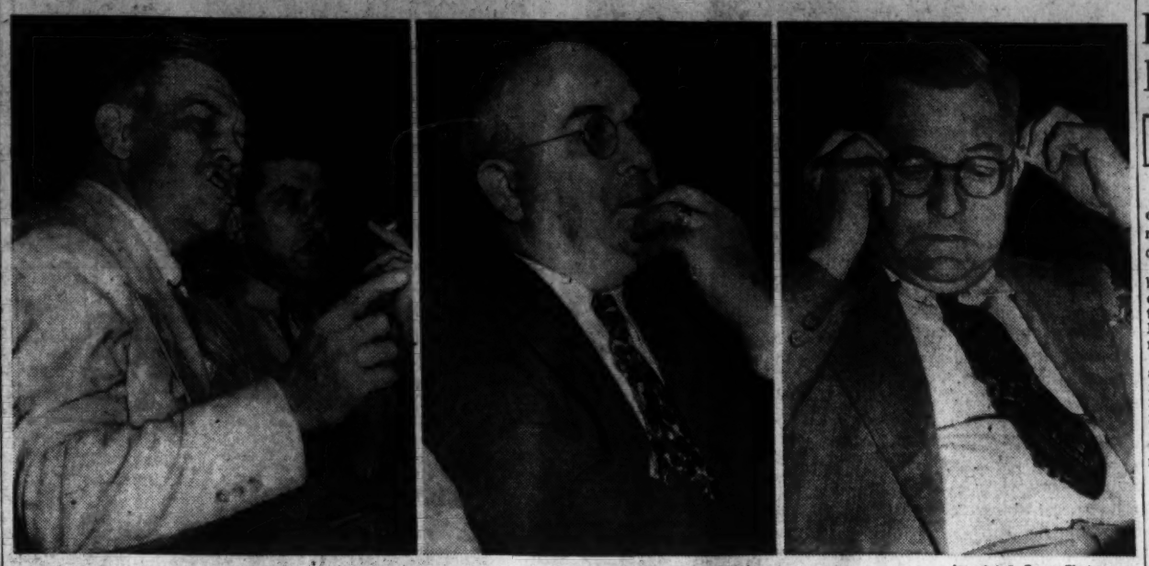
Through Thomas and through members of the Brier Hill Employes Association, La Follette brought out that guns were in the possession of many of the association's members, that a date, June 20, had been set for the "march" into the mill, and that the day before there was a busy scene in the organization's headquarters.

Guns, Helmets Acquired.

Members were bringing in guns, they said, and, in midafternoon, three cars arrived loaded with helmets. La Follette produced invoices to Youngstown Sheet & Tube for "safety hats" or "skull guards" delivered at about the same date.

William B. Gillies, vice president of Sheet & Tube, when asked for an explanation, said that in connection with "rushing the picket lines" the "matter of it being a pretty good thing to have something on your head was discussed."

Nonstrikers Used to Police 'Little Steel' Strike



Associated Press Photos.

Attorney Ray L. Thomas (left), who talks out of the side of his mouth, yesterday told the Senate Civil Liberties Committee that he had advised Youngstown, Ohio, non-strikers in last year's strike to arm themselves lest peace officers fail to protect them. He said he was legal adviser for two independent unions. The other pictures show Police Chief Carl Olson (right), who testified that 59 of the 144 special officers added during the strike were non-strikers or former steel employes, and Paul Lyden (center), city commissioner, who said each man was questioned about his former employment.

Soviet Refuses Border Parley If Troops Stay

ernment would be willing to open negotiations for peaceful settlement on the following conditions:

That fighting cease, that artillery be withdrawn, that all Japanese soldiers evacuate Soviet territory, and that Japan recognize the Chinese-Russian treaty and attached border maps.

The outcome of the conference and the fact the Changkufeng fighting had not spread indicated the incident would not develop into a major conflict.

Reds Retain "Freedom."

Schigemitsu said he would communicate the Soviet reply to his government at Tokyo.

A communique issued tonight said Litvinoff declared:

"The Soviet people will never tolerate the presence of foreign troops on even a little patch of territory they consider incontestably their own and will shrink from no sacrifice necessary to eject them."

Therefore, the communique said, as long as attacks on Soviet territory continue or a single Japanese soldier remains there, the Soviet government "must retain its freedom of action."

Tokyo Conciliatory.

Tokyo (Friday), Aug. 5 (U.P.).—Japan probably will continue her efforts for peaceful solution of the Russo-Japanese border clashes around Changkufeng Hill despite Russia's rejection of the initial proposals of the Japanese Ambassador in Moscow, persons close to Foreign Minister K. Ugaki said today.

Leaders of the cabinet were in almost constant session, with Finance Minister Seihin Ikeda taking a leading part in determining the government's conciliatory attitude. It was understood Ikeda impressed upon his colleagues that while the financial and economic position of the country is sound now it is not strong enough to stand the strain of a general Russo-Japanese war, in addition to the great conflict in China, without possibility of dangerous consequences.

War Minister Gen. Seishiro Itagaki was said to have agreed with the finance minister's analysis, although he insisted there must be no letup in Japan's preparations to fight.

Campaign Expense Inquiry Turns to Ohio's G.O.P. Race

to press. On receipt of your letter of July 30 on August 2 my committee commenced preparation of reports which will be filed promptly tomorrow."

The Sheppard committee thereupon wired Day, saying:

"Kindly reply at once whether you have a committee or committees receiving contributions, gifts, services or anything else of value in your behalf in this campaign and if you have such committee or committees please have them send report at once as to what it or they received and expended in your behalf."

Earlier, the Senate group had received from Sam Gutter, apparently a Day supporter, a telegram calling attention to "daily charges from responsible sources" in Ohio papers "alleging excessive expenditures" by Taft, "also the charge that other sources such as the Good Government League of Cleveland, Ohio, of which David Ingalls is vice president, is devoting its activities exclusively to the Taft campaign and further covering up expenditures properly chargeable to Taft's campaign."

The message urged that investigators be sent to Ohio to study the charges.

To the 30 Senate candidates who have not filed financial data, Sheppard sent this message:

"Special committee has not received from you questionnaire sent you with request that it be filled out and returned within ten days following its receipts . . . If the questionnaire is not received by Wednesday, August 10, the committee will consider further steps."

List of Warnings.

Gomer Smith, Oklahoma; J. Rosser Venable, Arkansas; G. Mason Owlett, Pennsylvania; Pat Tochey, Pennsylvania; Lillian Syme Clements, California; Philip Bancroft, California; Paul H. Bruns, California; Roy L. Riley, California; Sheridan Downey, California; John W. Preston, California; Benjamin Hilliard, Colorado; Arthur L. Hungerford, Maryland; J. Mark Wilcox, Florida; T. C. Merchant, Florida; Dave Scholtz, Florida; Finley Moore, Florida; Allen E. Walker, Florida; Frank Hancock, North Carolina; Clarence Willis, Indiana; Otha D. Wearin, Iowa; Mrs. Ellsworth Richardson, Iowa; E. A. Johansson, North Dakota; B. F. Woodal, North Dakota; Henry F. Schricker, Indiana; Richard Lyons, Illinois.

Sheppard said that an investigator on his way to Arkansas to study charge made by Representative McClelland, who is opposing Senator Hattie W. Caraway, would make a preliminary report Monday. Sheppard has never made public the nature of McClelland's charges.

Meanwhile, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, said the A. F. of L. had sent a "strong message" in support of Senator George L. Berry, candidate to succeed himself in Tennessee's Democratic primary yesterday.

The federation, he said, also is supporting Senator Robert J. Bulkley (Democrat), for renomination in Ohio's primary next Tuesday.

The record of Senator Alben W. Barkley (Democrat), of Kentucky, also was found to be "highly favorable" to the federation, and Barkley has been indorsed.

Green said he wanted it known "from the hill-tops" that the A. F. of L. opposed Representative Maury Maverick, recently defeated for renomination in Texas, because his record "was bad so far as we are concerned."

"I am glad he was defeated," the labor chieftain added.

Mother Charges Chow Bit Child, 7; Sues for $20,000

Charging that she was attacked by a chow dog and was bitten so severely on her face that she will be disfigured for life, 7-year-old Katrina Stanford, 318 A street northeast, yesterday through her mother filed suit for damages of $20,000.

The mother, Mrs. Ruby M. Stanford, stated in the complaint that the dog, belonging to James E. Shea and Edna J. Shea, of 328 A street northeast, bit her daughter last June 5. Attorney Louis E. Spiegler represented Mrs. Stanford.

In another suit filed in District Court yesterday, Joseph W. Farrell, 4230 Wisconsin avenue northwest, asked damages of $10,000 from Frances Clapp Hall, 4120 Forty-second street northwest, who he alleged had charged him with taking two ladders and a small oil stove. The accusations, it was alleged, were made in the presence of another and reflected upon the character of Mr. Farrell.

G. O. P. Parley Backs Group Health Effort

of Provident Mutual Life Insurance Company of Philadelphia, and member of the advisory council of the Social Security Board.

"We felt that medical care was a proper field of Government activity," Linton said, summarizing the discussion at the luncheon. "We hope that the American Medical Association will not be obstructionist, but will co-operate in the development of group health plans. The committee felt very definitely that there should be the greatest possible development of co-operative medical programs, and the greatest freedom in the experimentation in new methods of providing low cost medical care."

According to Linton, the Republicans agreed in principle with all the major social security measures adopted by the New Deal. He said he found no sentiment favoring scrapping the contributory plan for old-age security in favor of a "vest-pocket Townsend plan" for a small, flat pension. The problem, he said, was recognized primarily as one of improving the Social Security Act rather than trying to do away with it.

Higher Benefits Urged.

He said it was the consensus at the round table that the social security act should be liberalized and "socialized" to the extent of granting immediately a higher level of benefits. He said the present act followed too closely private insurance principles.

There was general criticism of the reserve fund, according to Linton, who described it as "just a clever device to get the national debt over into the reserve account." He had no particular objection even to this bookkeeping device, he said, if the budget were in balance, but so long as it remains out of balance, "the charge can be made that current expenses are being paid out of reserves."

He said there was a general feeling that the benefits of social security should be extended to include domestic servants and farm labor, but he admitted that such extension faced many legal and technical obstacles.

Relief Is Discussed.

At an open forum the committee heard discussions of relief and the merit system. The speaker on relief was Robert L. Johnson, president of the National Civil Service Reform League, former relief administrator of Pennsylvania under Gov. Earle, and co-founder of Time magazine. Charles P. Taft 2d, son of the late President William Howard Taft, and a member of the Cincinnati City Council, discussed "The Merit System and Public Service."

Johnson made it clear he felt that "relief holds a lot of dynamite for those who try to use it to promote their own particular game," whatever may be their party.

"Unfortunately," he said, "while the best men and women in both parties put up a stiff battle to keep relief on a strictly nonpolitical basis, the professional politicians (or many of them) who saw in relief a chance to strengthen their political organizations and control votes, wedged their way in wherever they could."

Lists Five Fundamentals.

He listed five fundamentals for efficient relief administration:

"1. The citizens of this country must make sure that all truly deserving unemployed are given adequate relief until opportunities for employment are afforded.

"2. Federal funds should supplement State and county, but 'administration' should be the responsibility of local, bi-partisan committees.

"3. Relief operations should be carefully checked at frequent intervals by qualified State and Federal inspectors to insure high standards of efficiency.

"4. Local works programs should gradually be developed with local funds and under local supervision. Work relief of this character will insure many much-needed benefits.

"5. Local contributions must provide the necessary money for materials and sufficient funds must be appropriated to be added to the direct relief dole so that the workers selected will receive living wages.

Taft said the main thing needing emphasis and a campaign of education by the Republican Party was the need of a trained personnel to deal with the economic problems with which modern government is today concerned.

The two principal tasks facing the party, he said, are demonstration of what the spoils system means to the people in money and service, and convincing demonstration of intent to enforce the merit system in Government.

"In every great department of the Federal Government and in every State," he said, "the money of the taxpayer—which means the money of every citizen—is leaking away. At least from the standpoint of taxpayers it looks like a leak. In fact it is a suction pump, the suction pump of the Democratic National and State organizations. In the case of some States, like my own, it unquestionably involves grafts. In the case of all the States and the Federal Government, it involves incompetence and interference with the delivery of service to the people."

Ex-Sheriff Killed, Two Shot Near Barkley's Headquarters

or spotting Chandler 50,000 votes with some takers.

An official of the Young Democrats here, which is nonpartisan in the campaign, who insisted his name be withheld, but who knows every acre of this county, said that Barkley will carry the county by 984 votes and will win throughout Kentucky by about 22,500 votes, based on the belief 410,000 voters will go to the Democratic primaries.

The belief is strong here that President Roosevelt did Barkley more harm than good, as Chandler reads from newspapers reports of the President's visit in those sections favorable to himself and turns them to sharp advantage.

A Political Classic.

The cabin where Barkley was born, remodeled into a two-story dwelling, now houses a Chandler voter, Fred Briggs, who runs a one-pump filling station, general store and soft drink stand at Wheel, Ky., a cross-roads 200 yards away. How Fred Biggs became a Chandler voter is a classic of present-day politics. Lees than three weeks ago, Fred said today, he pondered on the fact that there was only a muddy wagon-path between Wheel and Lowes Cross Roads, two miles away. Biggs got in touch with Chandler men in the county. Another local boy, owner of Mayfield's biggest drug store, is Robert Humphreys, Chandler's State highway commissioner—and he got action. A road grader, gravel truck, road workers, and bridge menders appeared magically. But before they rolled a single bump every voter along the little path—16 of them—was required to sign a Chandler pledge. Then the road was shot through in jig time.

But this little pocket of Chandler votes may yet be lost him, it appears. Three days ago there was a flood, after the heavy rains, and the new road was almost entirely washed away and now is practically impassable. Hastily graveled and graded, it disappeared like a mirage and now the neo-Chandlerites are grumbling that unless something is done before Saturday they may reconsider.

President in 1940?

But 68-year-old Jim R. Lowe, whose grandfather founded Lowes Cross Roads 101 years ago, and whose general store there advertises "please do not ask for credit for anything except undertaking," gnawed off a juicy hunk of black plug tobacco and said: "Now look around you and recollect that young Alben ran around here half-naked because his daddy couldn't buy him clothes. Now look at him, the second biggest man in the country and the President in 1940.

"Why there is 271 votes in this precinct, 14 of them Republicans, and every durn one of 'em, 'cept for maybe Fred Biggs and his crowd, is a hootin' hollerin' Barkley man.

"Look at that log-cabin, out in a field of dark fired Kaintucky tabacca and see how that man has risen."

Barkley is setting an endurance record here that even the dynamic Chandler can not match. Eleven full hour-long speeches today and 23 shorter ones tomorrow conclude his campaign. Leaning heavily on the New Deal and the President, he talks defensively, answering the quick-silver, slippery Chandler rather than attacking.

Gets Close to Crowd.

"Happy" is gun-cotton on the platform. He hits for a roar of applause every two sentences, and he gets it coming hypnotically until the crowd is talking back to him, urging him to "pour it on" and beginning to touch him and shake his hand. Happy roared:

"Now you farmers, what do you do when a big fat pig, standing knee-deep in clover, grunting and eating, gets so slick and lazy that he won't scratch?"

"We kill him," shouted the crowd.

"Why you turn him out to stumps-pasture, and I know that Saturday afternoon when the polls close at four o'clock, you'll take Ol' Alben out and open the gate to the stumpfield for him."

This killed the crowd and they sang and whooped their delight.

"Come on, Happy," they sang, and Happy sang back, "I'm a comin'" and away they went, Happy suddenly snapping:

"Why, Ol' Alben criticizes my war record when I was in training camp. He says he was so valuable that President Wilson persuaded him, begged him not to leave his $10,000-a-year job. He says I was playing my ukelele at the training camp.

"Well, maybe I did play the uke, because I'm playing on Ol' Alben like a flute right now."

Like a Revival Preacher.

This murdered the crowd again, and Happy, swaying like a revival preacher, shouted the lead lines while the crowd sang the refrains.

But behind the superb stump-speaking of the young governor is a political organization so tight that there are 500 State employes, temporarily at least, in this county alone, while Barkley can only muster 150 Federal employes. And nothing has helped Chandler more in recent days than the device by which his organization has appointed hundreds of old-age pension roll inspectors whose sole duty, it is charged, is to go around to each old-age pensioner, personally present the check and say: "You'd be crazy not to vote for Happy Chandler."

Saturday tells the tale of a powerful State political organization versus a powerful Federal political organization—the WPA versus the State Highway Commission and so forth.

Shelley said. "It would have required at least ten trucks."

Judge Schaeffer has said he would not charge the grand jury until a ruling is made on the constitutionality of bills passed last week by the Legislature to take over the investigation.

The legislative committee seeks to make its investigation before the grand jury, summoned to take up the charges next Monday.

Might Contest Seat.

Senator Burke (Democrat), Nebraska, said yesterday action of Gov. Earle of Pennsylvania in asking a legislative, rather than grand jury, investigation of fraud in Pennsylvania's primary election might provide grounds for contesting his seat in the Senate in the event he is elected.

"Gov. Earle's action in overriding the grand jury investigation in Pennsylvania," Burke said, "might be grounds for contesting his seating if he is elected to the Senate."

Cemetery Employe Is Killed by Train

Walter Bethea, colored, 50, was found dead yesterday on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad tracks at Linden, Md., near Silver Spring. He had been decapitated.

Bethea had been an employe of Forest Glen Cemetery, near Linden, for 20 years. He was reported to have been seen walking along the tracks last night.

'Competing' Plant 1 of 87 Projects Approved by PWA

Five power projects, including one intended to compete with an established private utility if the latter fails to accept a "fair and reasonable" offer to sell, were included in a list of 87 non-Federal projects for which Public Works Administration allotments were announced yesterday.

The competitive power plant allotment was made to the city of Freeman, S. D., the franchise covering the existing electric light and power service has expired. The allotment was "conditioned upon the town's making a bona fide effort in good faith to purchase existing competing utilities in accordance with the policy" announced recently by Administrator Harold L. Ickes.

The other power allotments provided funds for improvements, extensions and additions to existing municipal power plants in Ackley, Iowa; Charlevoix, Mich.; Cordell, Okla., and Valley City, N. Dak.

The 87 projects had an estimated construction cost of $15,604,146, with PWA grants of $7,023,844.

Crump's Machine Goes Into Lead in Tennessee Race

Cooper, opponent of the governor for renomination, and that Browning watchers had been driven from some precincts.

The Shelby County (Memphis) political organization headed by Crump and wielding a bloc of votes estimated to exceed 80,000, supported Cooper, Shelbyville attorney. Two years ago when Crump and Browning were allies, Shelby County handed the governor a majority of more than 59,000.

Now they are bitter enemies. The cause of their break was never revealed but their feud overshadowed all campaign issues.

Frank Rice, second in command of the Crump organization, forecast that the Shelby County vote would be around 85,000 and said "If Browning gets 5 per cent it'll shock me." The total State vote was expected to approximate 400,000.

Browning has made repeated efforts to "purge" the Shelby registration lists, and once considered sending 1,200 National Guardsmen to Memphis. A Federal judge in Memphis enjoined him from this step.

The Governor's State crime commission announced it would make a "thorough investigation" of the primary.

Other senatorial candidates were Mitchell, of the Fourth District, running on a "harmony" platform; Dr. John R. Neal, Knoxville, and C. L. Powell, of Hendersonville.

Republicans called off their Statewide primary. They will indorse an independent candidate for Governor at a convention. Harley Fowler, of Knoxville, and John Pritchett, of Nashville, will be certified by the party's executive committee as nominees for Senator and utilities commissioner. They were the only aspirants.

Athens, Tenn., Aug. 4 (U.P.).—Alton Richardson, 25, of Englewood, Tenn., was slashed to death and scores of others, including Tom Taylor, candidate for circuit criminal judge, were injured today in violence marking McMinn County's bloodiest Democratic primary.

Authorities were forced to close some polls.

Richardson was attempting to intercede in a fist fight among five men at the polls when his throat was slashed. He later died in a hospital.

Polls at Claxton were closed after Election Officers C. S. Simpson and Jake Burris were beaten and stabbed. Both were taken to a hospital.

At Etowah frequent fights marked the voting, and the jail there was "full."

Taylor, who opposed incumbent S. K. Hicks, suffered scalp wounds in a fight with John Rogers and Jim Carmichael, election officials, which resulted when Taylor demanded to be shown registration lists. Carmichael suffered face and head cuts and bruises. No arrests were made in this case, but two other arrests were made for fighting at Williamsburg.

At Athens, Vick Logan allegedly took an ax and tried to chop down several election booths. He was arrested on a charge of public drunkenness.

Protest Is Filed On Abandonment Of Trolley Routes

Alleging that the Public Utilities Commission was not justified in permitting the Capital Transit Co. to discontinue the street car line on California street, Second and F streets northeast, and Eighth and F streets northeast, Nellie E. Emerson yesterday sought a court order setting aside the order.

In her complaint, filed with the District Court, she asserted the commission failed to grant a final and complete hearing on the proposal to abandon the tracks prior to issuing the order.

The Doctors Are Awake.

Although the District Medical Society categorically denies published reports of a medical prepayment plan ascribed to one of its committees, it makes no attempt to hide the fact that it is endeavoring to develop an answer to the rising public clamor for a revised system of health economics.

It is now known that a liberal group within the society had begun work along this line some time before the matter attracted general attention in or around Washington. In so doing, these doctors were then running counter to the established policies of the American Medical Association. Now, however, they have at least a sort of blessing from the national medical organization. For even though the house of delegates is on record as opposed to "any innovation which might disturb . . . arrangements which have been built up through the years and depend upon many subtle and delicate personal relationships," the same group has recognized the validity of the general prepayment theory.

The latter indorsement is qualified by the insistence that prepayment plans shall not pay any doctor directly but rather shall indemnify the patient so that he personally may reimburse the physician who treats him.

The purpose of this stipulation is to minimize the opportunities for politics in any guise to interfere between the patient and the physician. How to translate this admirable idea into practice, however, is a difficult question. While the local Group Health Association fulfills the essential prepayment requirements of the day, in its ultimate projection it is scarcely insulated against politics.

Another experiment developed at Brattleboro, Vt., has a different scheme of operation which, by permitting patients to select any doctor in the community, has much to recommend it. Found principally in Canada, a third plan includes the rough equivalent of the "$50 deductible" clause common in automobile insurance, the advantage being that malingering, both conscious and unconscious, is minimized by it.

Somewhere among these and other ideas may be found the solution of the pressing problem of making the benefits of medical science available to all citizens. That the doctors are now applying themselves to the task of discovering it is indeed welcome news. Only with their sympathetic advice and willing assistance can any substantial progress in this field be expected.

Pendergast Meets His Match.

Not the least significant aspect of last Tuesday's primaries was the decisive rebuff administered to Boss Thomas J. Pendergast by the Democratic voters of Missouri.

One of the last of the old line political bosses, Pendergast has survived innumerable efforts to dislodge him. For many years he has ruled Kansas City with an iron hand and has also been a power to be reckoned with in the politics of the State. When, some time ago, he let it be known that he favored a certain candidate for the Missouri Supreme Court bench, the presumption was that this candidate would be nominated without much difficulty.

It turned out that Pendergast had reckoned without Gov. Lloyd C. Stark and the aroused Democrats of Missouri. Under the Governor's able and vigorous leadership an anti-Pendergast campaign was launched which won the nomination for the opposition candidate by a tremendous plurality.

This defeat in the State primaries suffered by his machine does not necessarily mean that Pendergast is through. His power remains strong in Kansas City. But with his prestige lessened by virtue of what happened last Tuesday, it is not inconceivable that his days as boss of Kansas City may also be numbered.

Nine Since June 4.

One of the worst aspects of city life is now being sorrowfully impressed on Washington. Children are miserably cramped in the more congested areas. They play in the streets, with the result that since June 4 nine have been run down by automobiles.

This is far above the average summer's toll. In 1935 between June and August not a single child was killed here; last year in the same period there were only two. The number of children on the streets today cannot have increased substantially. Is it, then, just had luck this year? Say, rather, it was good luck during past years.

If anything, traffic records show Washington motorists to have been driving more safely since January than in any previous year. The three E's—engineering, enforcement, education—have done much, but plainly not all. Two P's, quite evidently, now need stressing.

One stands for playgrounds, 13 more of which either have been or soon will be opened thanks to the WPA which is providing supervisors. The other P refers to parents. All the playgrounds in the world will not protect a child walking to and from his home. That is the parents' assignment, a fact which the police are now making good efforts to drive home.

It seems unbelievable that any should need the reminder, but it appears so. If, as a bitter wag has put it, children are to be seen but not hurt, they must not be permitted to play in unguarded streets and they must be kept under adult supervision when crossing busy thoroughfares.

Fading Third-Term Prospects.

The most striking aspect of the Democratic primaries thus far held is the independent attitude taken by the majority of voters. Senator Clark's remarkable victory in Missouri is only the latest indication that the majority party is still eager to reward men who think for themselves. Appeals for votes on the basis of 100 per cent loyalty to the New Deal have left the voters of most States unimpressed.

Implications of great significance to the country may be found in this trend. It means that Democrats in most States are determined to choose their own candidates without interference. So far as can be determined, President Roosevelt's appeal for the nomination of candidates in harmony with his views has had very little effect upon the outcome of any contest. The people have voted for candidates who most nearly represent their own viewpoints, and not specifically for or against the New Deal.

This means, of course, that the President will not achieve unification of the Democratic Party as he apparently hoped when he left on his transcontinental trip. Democrats in the next Congress will reflect many different shades of opinion on major issues. And it is reasonable to expect that those views will be more freely expressed than they have been in the past. For a considerable number of legislators now positively know that their constituents expect them to think for themselves. These "yes, but" men may easily wield the balance of power in the next Congress.

With the more conservative wing of the Democratic Party thus strengthened, talk of a third term for President Roosevelt is also likely to diminish. Senator J. Hamilton Lewis, for example, appears to take it for granted that the President will retire at the end of his present term. In announcing his own plans to retire from the Senate at the end of the next session, Mr. Lewis said he decided to serve until 1939 only to assist the President in enactment of his program, or rather such parts of the program as the Senator approves. He seems to have dismissed the idea that the President might need help after 1940.

Some commentators assert that failure to unify the majority party during the next two years will make it necessary for Mr. Roosevelt to run again. They argue that he would be the only candidate with sufficient strength to insure continuation of the New Deal. But that line of reasoning ignores the fact that the third-term issue might weaken the party more than the President's prestige would strengthen it.

In other words, the triumph of many "yes, but" Democrats in the primaries suggests that the President could not seek a third term without risking an open split in his party. Powerful forces will probably soon be at work to prevent any such contingency. Astute politicians on both sides will be looking for a compromise candidate who can draw strength from both wings of the party without a third-term handicap. Friends of Senator Clark believe that his overwhelming victory puts him in a strategic position to take advantage of this prospective movement.

In the interests of Democratic unity in 1940 the ideal candidate would be one who is independent in attitude without being hostile to the New Deal. The significance of Senator Clark's enormous vote is that it lifts him above various other potential candidates who would be eligible to head a middle-of-the-road ticket. In effect, the Democrats of Missouri have said that it is not necessary to look beyond their State for a candidate who would carry on the Democratic tradition.

Senator Clark undoubtedly has Presidential aspirations. The fact that Woodrow Wilson was nominated by only a small margin over the Senator's father, Speaker Champ Clark, in the Baltimore convention of 1912 probably makes this high office a special challenge to him. Assuming that Senator Clark will be re-elected in November, it would not be surprising if that event should mark the beginning of a quiet campaign to secure the Presidential nomination for him.

High Commissioner McNutt's hat is already in the ring. Other candidates are certain to emerge as it becomes more apparent that the President no longer holds virtually complete control over the Democratic Party. Those who would break the two-term precedent on the ground that President Roosevelt represents the only leadership in the Democratic Party may soon find themselves without an argument.

Talk of a third race for the President will continue, of course, until he eliminates himself or requests renomination. But it is not improbable that the President's final decision will be determined in large measure by events beyond his control. At present the trend of those events certainly cannot be considered favorable to any attempt to upset the two-term tradition.

The Mexican Note.

On July 21, Secretary Hull, in a note at once friendly and firm, suggested to Mexico that:

> There be submitted to arbitration the question whether there has been compliance by the government of Mexico with the rule of compensation as prescribed by international law in the case of American citizens whose farms and agrarian properties have been expropriated by the Mexican government since August 30, 1927, and, if not, the amount of, and terms under which, compensation should be made by the government of Mexico.

This was an eminently reasonable suggestion. After all, Mexico has never claimed the right to confiscate American-owned property within her borders. And the United States, for its part, has never denied Mexico's right to expropriate the holdings of Americans. But such expropriations, our Government has insisted, involve an obligation on Mexico's part to make "adequate, effective and prompt compensation" for the properties taken over.

The Mexican reply to the Hull note is a curious mixture of eloquence and evasiveness. It is far more ardent than logical. Forced to admit that it is bound to make adequate indemnification for expropriated properties, the Cardenas government takes the position that "the time and the manner of such payment should be determined by her (Mexico's) own laws." But since 11 years have already elapsed without one cent of payment being made for American-owned property that had been expropriated, Mexico's will to pay would seem to be somewhat atrophied, to say the least.

No wonder, then, that the Cardenas regime is not anxious to have the question of its compliance with the international law regarding compensation for expropriated property made a subject of arbitration. Instead, much is made of the point that Mexico is at the moment too poor to pay for past seizures. Yet the policy of expropriation is still being applied on a much wider scale.

There is every reason to believe that the contentions embodied in the latest Mexican note will be rejected. But since it does embody at least a tentative, if unsatisfactory, offer to initiate negotiations "to arrive at an en bloc agreement" the way is opened for further exchanges.

In its relations with Mexico the United States has during recent years practiced to the full the great virtues of patience, forbearance and good neighborliness. Mexico would be ill advised to take unreasonable advantage of the American attitude. In rejecting the arbitration offer the Cardenas government has not helped its case before the bar of public opinion.

Treasure Hunt.

Nobody has yet dared to defy the injunction to "spare these stones" which appears over the grave of the Bard at Stratford-on-Avon. No such warning, however, is inscribed on the tomb of his great contemporary, Edmund Spenser, in Westminster Abbey. And so the dean of the abbey has yielded to what seems to have been a pretty insistent demand by some London literati that this tomb be reopened and examined.

Curiously enough, the principal purpose of this exploration concerns not Spenser so much as Shakespeare. It is even hoped to settle, one way or another, once and for all, the controversy about the authorship of the Shakespeare plays and poems. This ambitious notion is based on the assertion of an Elizabethan chronicler that all the great poets of that time were present when the remains of Spenser were placed "nigh to Chaucer" in the Poets' Corner. Each of the poets, says the same authority, wrote a eulogy in verse which was placed beside the coffin.

Shakespeare was 12 years younger than Spenser and survived him by 17. If he was indeed the greatest poet of them all he should certainly have been at the funeral and a hitherto unknown poem in his actual handwriting must be in the tomb. And should this work when found prove to be of a quality with the Sonnets or even with The Phoenix and The Turtle, his case, it is argued, would be forever clinched.

But it will take more than mere weight of evidence to end so stanch a British institution as the Shakespeare controversy. If no such thing existed it would be necessary to invent it. Else what would all those elderly gentlemen with an archeo-genealogical turn of mind ever find to do with themselves?

Has anyone thought to test the tensile strength of the Roosevelt coattails?

Too many people in this country are content with a hand-to-mouth existence these days—when the hand is Uncle Sam's.

"Peeping Tom Arrested in Florida City."—Headline. For goodness sakes, why didn't he go over to the beach and take a good look?

"The blonde is passing out," says an anthropologist. Quick, lend us a hand and let's keep her from sliding under the table this time.

Crash Ahead?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Democratic train is under full steam. The chief engineer has the throttle wide open and the whistle is tooting a high ball with all power on. With red lights staring him in the face, with water getting low and fuel almost gone, he thinks he still will make the grade, regardless of the danger to the many passengers he is dragging into the wreck that is bound to come.

People have paid their fare and deserve to be piloted safely to their destination by a steady hand and watchful eye. The load is heavy and the road is crooked and we will surely crash when we start around that $4,000,000,000 curve just ahead, unless the public, asleep at the switch, can be awakened at once!

May we switch to the American line, with an American system for American people, and American jobs for American people with Old Deal at the throttle and a day's work for the conductor.

Then we can meet wife and kiddies with a smile and lie down at night without going through the alphabet to find out if we are within the law, or what setup to go to next day for a job or relief. Come on, old 1940, we are betting on you. We will see you then, if we don't crash now.

Appreciation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have enjoyed The Post Impressionist column for some time, and have found much therein that I consider worthy and interesting; and I find the high standard of this section of The Post compares favorably with articles of similar character found in some of the better magazines.

Many of the Impressionists have found their way into my scrapbook. I especially value the one entitled "Blackberries," by Laurie Havron, which re-created for me a similar incident in childhood; and "The Young Gods" by the same author. This morning's column, "Louisa," by Hazel S. Detwiler, is a charming sketch.

Tree-Lined Roads.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: All appropriations for road building and improvement should automatically carry provisions for roadside tree planting. Had this been done when good roads were inaugurated in this country, we would now have a most beautiful countryside, comfort in travel and great enhancement in property values. The cost of such a program, considering the amounts spent on our road systems, would be so insignificant and the ultimate results so desirable that it is hard to believe we have not taken full advantage of this wonderful opportunity. Trees improve with the years and furnish real permanent improvement.

Career Vs. Careen.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The news item on August 3 which told of a runaway calf in the Monument Grounds was no doubt intended to be humorous, but the most ludicrous feature of the article was the misuse of the word "careen;" "the calf careened through the Ellipse with Brown in pursuit."

"Careen" means to incline to one side, as a ship under press of sail; and to "careen" a ship means to heave it on one side, for the purpose of cleaning or repairing the opposite side. We read daily of speeding automobiles "careening" madly through the streets. An automobile might "careen" if it tilts to one side, and might possibly run for a short distance on two side wheels, but the proper word to use to describe the wild dash of a machine through city streets is "career," which means a race, a rapid running, speed in motion, to move of run rapidly.

"Careen" is derived from the French "carene," meaning the side and keel of a ship.

"Career" is derived from the basic Latin "curro," to run.

In the light of these correct definitions can you visualize a calf "careening?" And if a calf did, in fact, "careen," that is, if it tilted to the left, with the right legs off the ground, would it be possible for it to dash madly through the Monument Grounds, using only its left legs?

Despite the widespread erroneous use of this word, automobiles do not "careen." Neither do calves, especially when pursued by motorcycle police.

Historical Errors.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is amazing to read from time to time articles by persons who are supposed to be not only educated but are professional writers, and observe the errors they make in matters of the most common knowledge. A case in point is the article in The Post of August 1 by Carroll Kilpatrick on the "Awakening South." He says among other things: "Where an older generation of Southerners fought over the question of Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman's taste for stolen silver, the new generations are battling over . . ."

Probably every child in the eighth grade knows that the reference should have been to Gen. Ben Butler who, while in command in New Orleans in the Civil War, was charged with having appropriated all the silverware of private ownership he could get hold of.

The statement of Mr. Kilpatrick, while probably inadvertent, does a very grave injustice to the Sherman family, and particularly to the memory of Gen. Sherman, who was a man of the very highest personal integrity, though as a Southerner I do not approve of his methods in his Georgia and South Carolina campaigns.

Medicine's Future.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Philosophers, as well as geologists, tell us that the first sign of age and disintegration is the inability to change. A thing crystallizes and then it falls apart. We wonder if that is what the American Medical Association is about to do.

In all this fight in the medical world it is amazing how seldom the good of the laity is mentioned, specifically. If we, ourselves, rather than our patronage, were the great thing on the doctors' hearts it seems impossible that it would not creep into the discussion a little more. We begin to feel like pawns in some sharply contested game.

Happily some people envision the day of preventive medicine when each, through better understanding, will begin to be his own doctor. When that time comes we can picture the doctors dividing their time between their offices and the classrooms. In the public schools people will learn a few basic principles of body chemistry, psychology, mental and physical hygiene, home treatments and, perhaps, even a little enlightening history of medicine and survey of therapeutic methods. Such subjects might be found to have as much to do with human happiness as Greek. Incidentally such a system would take care of the doctors' income and it would minimize exploitation of the laity by unscrupulous doctors and medicine venders.

Streetcar Underpass?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There has been some suggestion of having an underpass for streetcars at the Thomas Circle, as traffic there is quite congested at certain times of the day. Traffic lights there that would hold back automobiles going west on M street and Massachusetts avenue, allowing the streetcars to have right of way going north, and the same plan for streetcars going south on the west side, would greatly help conditions there.

A very much worse condition—that should have received attention long ago—is that at Dupont Circle, where both car tracks run around the left, or western, side of that circle. Cars going north face automobiles coming toward them on the tracks and on both sides of the road. The tracks going north there should go around the right side of the circle and those going south around the west side as they do elsewhere.

It is astonishing that this matter has not received attention, while so much digging-up has been going on in other localities. The tracks on E street, near the National Theater, are just now being removed. Twelfth street, south of the Avenue, has just been widened about 20 feet. But the Dupont Circle condition is given no attention, and it is by far the most important of all.

It would seem that traffic lights that would give only one line of traffic right of way at one time, would be sufficient, in most places, without defacing the city by an underpass in its midst.

Socialized Medicine.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: All my life I have had interesting acquaintances with the doctor and dentist. These angels of mercy are giving us their lives. I, for one, do not believe the morale of the "profession" should be eliminated by bureaucracy.

When mankind is very ill or is dying he is very much alone except for his own doctor. Do you think I want a ward heeler to send me a doctor who has not gone through all his sacrifices to gain enough reputation to acquire name and prestige to try cure me of ills? Or do I want a doctor of my own choice? I'm sure I know.

Aunt Mandy.

THE old lady with the reticule on the escalator brought it all back to me—an enchanted day of a childhood summer. "Aunt Mandy would have ridden an escalator!" I thought, and right then and there I was dangling my feet from the back of a spring wagon, wiggling my toes (I still have the habit) in utter enjoyment.

Aunt Mandy came to visit regularly every summer. Whose aunt she was—or if, in fact, she was anyone's aunt—I never knew. All that mattered was that she arrived in her black bombazine—pancake hat with the feather, and her reticule—there she was, complete, and with her came enchantment.

She told stories—"When I was a little girl"—and it didn't seem ludicrous to us that a miniature Aunt Mandy in black pranked and played through her stories.

She had a reticule that smelled of camphor, peppermint, black dye and celluloid hairpins and combs. Apparently it was inexhaustible. It was like the horn of plenty she told us about. For years I always pictured the Horn of Plenty as a sort of Greek reticule.

But best of all there were the expeditions, as she called them. And that brings me back to the spring wagon and my wriggling toes. We were going fishing. Our gear was all stowed away neatly—our lunch a great basketful of deliciousness packed well up in front, away from our too eager fingers. Mother and Aunt Mandy high up on the seat and we children wedged in the back—backboard down—our feet dangling.

Away we went. Goodness, we were going fast—and not in the direction we were supposed to go—and then Mother yelled: "Jump, everyone! This beast has decided to run away!"

We jumped, sprawling in the dusty road. We sat up, and wonder of wonders, there was Aunt Mandy standing on her head. She righted herself—her black bombazine all dusty, as were we. "I used to try that years ago," she said reflectively, "and I could never quite make it. Well! That's one more ambition realized before I die."

We knew then that it was all right to laugh, and how we laughed as we helped brush dust and pick up things that had fallen out of the reticule.

I was frightened then as I thought of Mother—holding on to the reins as the horse flashed down the road. "Do you think——" I began, and Aunt Mandy said, "For Goodness sake, child!" And then I knew my mother could handle any runaway horse in the world, and I always thank Aunt Mandy for that beautiful picture of my mother rocketing away, holding the reins of the fleeing horse—perfectly safe.

We sat and waited along the side of the road, and after a while Mother came driving back, laughing under her big straw hat. "I fixed him!" she called, and truly she had, for the horse was gentle and docile enough now. "But I'm afraid we'd better not use him—he's pretty hot."

Before we had had time to realize that perhaps we weren't going fishing, Aunt Mandy said, "It's a little late for the fish to bite, and I've been thinking we could just walk up to the Piney Wood and eat our lunch there."

So after the horse was put away we went walking up to the Piney Wood.

We came home late, full of sun and happiness. "Thanks to that fool beast," said Aunt Mandy, "I not only stood on my head but we'll be able to go fishing tomorrow." Tomorrow instantly became the shining goal of our dreamy sleepiness.

I remember the last time she came to visit us. I had been playing at a neighbor's house, and when I came home she was there. "How long have you been here?" I asked. "Since 3:30," she replied. And only my mother and Aunt Mandy knew why I cried. She had been there a whole hour and a half and I hadn't known it. She put her hand on my hair.

No Cancellations!

Yesterday (July 29) Pan American's clippers took off as usual on their scheduled transpacific flights, and without a single cancellation. Every passenger who had a reservation was aboard when the China Clipper flew from Alameda for Honolulu and the Philippine Clipper carried an additional passenger when she left Honolulu for California. On both flights were passengers who had booked after the Hawaii Clipper was reported missing.

Nothing better illustrates the established character of transpacific flying as a means of travel. Accidents happen in all standard modes of transportation, but they are not to be expected, and the fact that one occurs, even of such dramatic nature as the disappearance of the Hawaii Clipper, still unreported as this was written, does not in the least deter travel.

Flying has become standard.

Negroes And Baseball.

JAKE POWELL, a part-time outfielder for the New York Yankees, is riding the pine for ten days for blurting in an impromptu broadcast on the field in Chicago that he spent his winters doing police work and that his specialty was hitting "Niggers" over the head with his club.

Judge Landis, who tried the case and imposed the penalty, would thus placate the colored clientele of a business which trades under the name of the national game but has always treated the Negroes as Adolf Hitler treats the Jews.

If all American employers did the same the entire Negro population of this country would starve, become public charges or go back to slavery. So Powell was only giving expression in crude, brief wordage to the unspoken, but inflexible policy of the organized baseball industry. Moreover, his remark was thoughtless and probably untrue, whereas the men who employ him and Judge Landis have given solemn study to the problem and confirmed their decision by their conduct.

• • • •

THUS no Negro ever has been permitted to play ball or even to try out for a job in the organized industry, and Babe Ruth, were he a colored man, would not have risen above the rank and pay of the leaky-roof leagues in which dark men operate as semi-pros.

In the semipro business, however, for more than a quarter of a century white men have played on good terms against teams of Negroes. The white men have included major leaguers come down in the world unemployed minor leaguers, part-time mediocrities playing for a little extra cash and love of the game and some current major league players out barnstorming after their work was done.

From the days of Rube Foster, a famous colored pitcher, to the present the major league teams, as such, have avoided games with Negro teams, so there is no line of comparison, but certainly Foster and other individuals would have made good in the most expert company, but for the great "verboten." Foster was good, and major league hitters who faced him in informal games admitted that he was ready in all respects but one.

Many of the white players are Southern men who would object to Negroes, and the national organization of baseball is such that men must be farmed out to minor leagues playing in Southern cities where a Negro would be unwelcome on the field in white company. These are practical difficulties which the magnates have had to consider, and it is no fault of theirs that the prejudice exists.

However, they have been content to respect the prejudice and have never done anything to soften it up, even in Northern cities where public opinion would have approved the granting of an opportunity to a pioneer Negro major or minor leaguer. By the time half a dozen Negroes had been given a chance, some to fail on their merits, no doubt, the novelty would wear off, and organized baseball, in certain areas, at least, would be free of discrimination on racial grounds.

From the standpoint of the customers there would be no risk at all North of the line, for they have seen and cheered many Negro fighters and runners and a few football players in open competition and bodily contact with white men. And if there is danger in Harlem, where both the Yankees and Giants play ball, of disorder over a sport event, it would be diminished, not aggravated, by a decision to permit Negro players to make good or fall according to their skill.

• • • •

IT IS EASY to rage at the major leagues and denounce the magnates for bowing to a prejudice that was none of their doing, but if they were to open up the game completely to Negro players overnight, they would bring on disorder and defeat the reform. Consistently they would have to impose colored recruits and reserve players on Southern communities where they operate, and the South just wouldn't agree.

But the baseball business does nothing at all about this discrimination, and Powell can argue plausibly that he got his cue from the very men whose hired disciplinarian has benched him for an idle remark.

The Yankees or one of the Chicago teams could easily try the experiment of using a star colored player from one of the semipro clubs. The customers would suffer no shock, and the Southern white boys would find after a few games that it didn't hurt them much after all.

Neutrality Note.

During May, 1938, sales of United States airplanes to China amounted to $1,609,975, and plane sales to Japan totaled $1,889,024.

These sales were made with the permission of the United States State Department, which gave out these figures.

The same State Department notified Douglas Corrigan, the air hero of the hour, that he must not sell his airplane abroad. Such a sale, the State Department told Corrigan, would constitute a violation of the neutrality act.

German Expansion

By Louis Lochner.

Correspondence of the Associated Press.

Berlin.—The Sudeten question involving Czechoslovakia's 3,500,000 Germanic inhabitants is Nazi Germany's touchstone of future foreign policy.

If the Czechoslovak government satisfies German demands for self-government of the Sudeten minority, Nazi Germany will content herself with an economic imperialism that will make her the undisputed master of central and southeastern Europe.

If current negotiations between Sudeten Leader Konrad Henlein and Premier Hadza, of Czechoslovakia, prove a flop, Adolf Hitler is prepared to go the way of force, if necessary, to unite all Germans along the fringes of the Reich with greater Germany.

A man high in Nazi Party councils made these predictions:

"Supposing the Sudeten problem is not settled to Hitler's satisfaction," he was asked. "Is Germany ready even to risk a European war to gain his ends?"

"Absolutely," was the firm reply.

British "Realism" Is Germany's Hope.

"Even this extreme possibility has been taken into account. But we hope and trust such a contingency will never arise. We count on the realistic sense of Great Britain and France.

"Nor would we ever start a war on behalf of the Sudetens. But if there should be a spontaneous uprising in that region (the part of Czechoslovakia fringing Germany's southeastern frontier) and an appeal for aid were sent to us, we could not but rally to the support of our 3,500,000 brethren."

The man who predicted this as the path of Nazi policy sees the top Nazi leaders almost daily and writes most of the leading articles on foreign policy for his powerful newspaper.

"Our original idea was that all Germans, no matter under whose sovereignty, now in the states bordering Germany, must in due time be reunited with the German Empire," he said.

"Austrian anschluss was the first great step toward the realization of this ideal. The Sudetic region of Czechoslovakia, Memel (part of Lithuania) and Danzig loomed as the next objectives.

Henlein's Program "Points a Way."

"Konrad Henlein's program points a way, however, for Germans outside the Reich to come under Hitler's protection without physical union of German districts outside Germany with the Reich. In essence his program means the Sudetens could do within Czechoslovakia whatever they could do were they a part of Germany. They could be National Socialists just as we are.

"Beyond that we also demand that Czechoslovakia follow no foreign policy that is inimical to us or to which we do not agree.

(Czechoslovakia has mutual assistance treaties with both Soviet Russia and France.

(Viscount Runciman is in Czechoslovakia as Britain's unofficial mediator to study the troublesome minority question hoping to prevent it from becoming an issue of war.)

"Moreover Czechoslovakia must lean closely on her western neighbor economically. A customs union might not be advisable at the very beginning, but certainly a system of preferential tariffs should be adopted.

High Nazi Reveals Plans for Memel.

"If we can thus secure economic domination of the little Czech state, and a fitting of her foreign policy into that of Adolf Hitler's, and if beside the Czech government will give guarantees there will be no cause for Sudeten Germans to complain of their treatment, we might revise our Nazi conceptions and content ourselves with such an arrangement.

"Such an arrangement would then immediately be proposed to Lithuania as regards Memel and, I believe, be accepted.

"Great Britain and France simply must understand, once and for all, that Germany desires central and southeast Europe as her sphere of influence.

"We are willing to disinterest ourselves in Spain if we can have assurances that the Danubian states and other states contiguous to ours, especially those with sazeable German minorities, will develop close economic relations with us and adopt or pursue no policy inimical or detrimental to Germany.

Demand For Colonies Would Remain.

"If this plan is successful, Adolf Hitler can announce to the world that his program of uniting all Germans has been fulfilled by the absorption of Austria and by assurances of border states that German minorities will be autonomous in their various districts across the German frontier," said this authoritative Nazi.

Such widened power, however, would not take the place of colonies, he asserted, even though Germany's Italian ally might consider conquest of Ethiopia satisfaction of Italy's colonial aims.

"You don't suppose for a moment that Mussolini would sit idly by if, in the event of a collapse in Russia, Spain or China, the big powers divided the spheres of influence?" he asked.

"Wherever there is a division of the spoils, we insist in being in on it."

In a more conciliatory mood he said "don't fear Germany will grow too strong. As regards colonies, all we ask is the return of those stolen from us at the end of the World War.

"As to Europe, don't forget that France on the west, Soviet Russia in the east and Turkey in the southeast are there as factors we always shall have to reckon with—as brakes."

Prague Apologizes.

Tuesday's Primaries

By Ernest Lindley

Merely "Good Show" In Virginia.

PARTISAN bellows can't blow much significance into the results of the Democratic Congressional primaries in Virginia and West Virginia. If they pointed toward any general conclusion it is only the familiar one that a Congressman who is supported by the political machine in his district is hard to beat in a primary. Every Democratic Congressman in Virginia and West Virginia was renominated except one. He had served only one term; he was opposed by the local political machine, or a good part of it; and he was defeated by his predecesor, who had served two terms in Congress.

IN CONTRAST, the Republican primaries in Kansas yielded results which are solid and perhaps of national imbportance. In the Senatorial primary the Republicans thoroughly squelched the hate-peddling preacher, the Rev. Gerald B. Winrod. Simuntanelyously they nominated for Governor a man whose father was a Jew. This is the first time, so far as this writer has been able to learn, that either major party in Kansas has nominated for high office a person who did not come from the so-called "native American stock" with which the State is chiefly populated. This emphatic double rejection of intolerance in the State in which the Ku Klux Klan flourished 15 years ago invites national applause. It may reassure some of the Eastern liberals who tend to break out in a sweat every time it is reported that a new rabble-rouser, shirted or unshirted, is on the loose.

In addition to smashing Winrod and all he implies, the Kansas Republicans turned their backs on the conservative wing of their own party. Former Gov. Clyde M. Reed, their nominee for Senator, has long had the reputation of being one of the most progressive politicians in Kansas. After serving one term as Governor, he was beaten for renomination by the Republican "Old Guard" under the management of John D. M. Hamilton, present Republican national chairman. He did not support the Republican national ticket in either 1932 or 1936. In his recent campaign he reinstated himself in the grace of some of the Kansas Republicans by criticizing certain features of the New Deal. But his nomination contains no solace to the men who still control the Republican National Committee.

Mr. Ratner, the Republican nominee for Governor, is a moderate progressive with a labor tie-up as an attorney for some of the railway brotherhoods. Both he and the Republican nominee for attorney general were the hand-picked candidates of former Gov. Alf M. Landon, who has always been identified in Kansas with the progressive wing of the Republican party. They both defeated right-wing Republicans. So, there wasn't much nourishment in the Republican primaries in Kansas for the extreme critics of Mr. Roosevelt.

• • • •

IN MISSOURI, the renomination of Senator Bennett C. Clark without serious opposition is less important than the victory of the anti-Pendergast forces in the Democratic party in a judgeship contest. This may mark the beginning of the end of one of the most powerful and objectionable political machines in the country. Although national issues had little or nothing to do with this intra-party fight, the victors—Gov. Stark, the St. Louis organization and many of their allies in rural Missouri—are pro-Roosevelt. The Roosevelt Administration has maintained diplomatic relations with the Pendergast machine. But since Mr. Roosevelt reappointed United States Attorney Milligan, whose vote-fraud prosecutions have marked him as No. 1 enemy of the Pendergast organization, the New Dealers have not expected any help from this section of the party in their efforts to control the Democratic national convention of 1940. Presumably, Senator Clark will be presented to that convention as a "favorite-son" Presidential candidate. Vice President Garner and other anti-New Deal Democrats have been talking favorably of him as Mr. Roosevelt's successor. On his record to date, Senator Clark is unacceptable to the leading New Dealers in Washington. The primary Tuesday improves the possibility that, if a showdown comes at the 1940 convention, a majority of the Missouri delegates will be found on Mr. Roosevelt's side.

• • • •

THE CONGRESSIONAL primary in the Eighth Virginia District, in which Representative Smith so easily defeated William E. Dodd jr., demonstrated again that it is foolish to let it be said you are fighting unless you really are. The President and his friends had every reason to wish to see Mr. Smith supplanted by a New Dealer. They could have picked a good man, perhaps in consultation with Gov. Price of Virginia, organized a campaign and, possibly beaten Mr. Smith. But they didn't. Mr. Dodd, inexperienced and almost unknown in the district except as the son of the former Ambassador to Germany, put himself forward as a candidate. A few progressive newspaper correspondents and a handful of minor New Dealers decided to get behind him. They were finally able to obtain a little assistance from "Tommy" Corcoran and Secretary Ickes. The White House and the Democratic National Committee kept clear of the contest. The campaign for Mr. Dodd was much like the one that Heywood Broun made for Congress in New York a few years ago. It was a good show, but not well-grounded in practical politics. And the practical politicians, despite what they say for public consumption, are not likely to see much significance in the outcome of the Smith-Dodd contest.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Imaginary Interviews: W. Lee O'Daniel.

Q.—Mr. O'Daniel, to what do you attribute your remarkable rise in Texas politics?

A.—It may be due to the fact that Texas is sick of Texas politics.

Q.—Do you subscribe to the impression that it was purely a radio triumph, a sort of typical mass reaction to a good radio hour?

A.—Well, I know better than to knock my own act, but I think a lot of people put too much emphasis on the radio angle. Some of my strength may have been due to the fact I'm a businessman.

Q.—You don't seriously imply that a businessman can get anywhere in an American election, Mr. O'Daniel?

A.—That may be the most significant thing about my victory. It may be the turning point in public opinion. I campaigned as a business man; I was selling flour all the time, and don't forget I've even been president of a chamber of commerce!

Q.—Were you really a chamber of commerce president?

A.—Yes sir, and when the voters start overlooking a thing like that in this country today it's a mighty good sign. Why, up to my victory, a man could get licked for office anywhere by just being exposed as having belonged to a chamber of commerce.

Q.—You are not, of course, an economic royalist?

A.—No. My flour orders are pouring in, but they haven't become big enough for that yet.

Q.—It was an inescapable fact, of course, that on the radio you appealed primarily as an entertainer and showman, was it not?

A.—Yes, and that's where the businessmen of America have fallen down. Speak to most voters about a businessman and they get a picture of a sour-pussed, hard-hearted old iceberg without a laugh in his system.

Q.—You think that if the business men of the country were a more cheerful lot they'd have a better chance of laying the politicians a stymie?

A.—It's their only chance. They've got to pep themselves up, spring some new gags, develop showmanship and bring their own music. The people ain't sold on screwy political theories. They've just been following the wild men because they've been putting on a more entertaining show.

Q.—I see you are kissing babies. That's pure politics, isn't it?

A.—No, that's good business.

Q.—You are being talked about as a Presidential candidate, Mr. O'Daniel. Do you aspire to the White House?

A.—I could certainly sell a lot of flour from that address.

Q.—But do you feel that you have a chance to become President?

A.—The radio act is going so good I wouldn't be surprised. I figure that with another fiddle and a couple of new hilly-billy numbers I might make it.

Peace.

The battle's o'er—
The sky is clearer;
O'Hara won't
Be Norma Shearer.

A Brooklyn brewery is going to turn out a 5-cent bottle of beer. If the Republican Party had thought that up and saved it for 1940 it would have swept the next election.

The other day we saw a newspaper photo of a political leader posing for the cameras on a merry-go-round and somehow it seemed strangely appropriate. He was on a flying-horse, grinning from ear to ear, and his only worry seemed to be whether he was in focus.

Christus Morituus.

(No Nazi official was present and no Nazi banner flown at the burial of Anton Lang, the Christus of the Passion Play.)

No volley of rifles, no martial salute,
No farewell "heil" to the gentle soul
That breathed life into the Christus role—
The drums were silent, the trumpets mute;

Far from the tramp of the Nazi horde,
They buried the player of Christ the Lord.

All in a day's work when it was done—
The soldiers of Caesar straggled away,
From the cross-topped hill where they came to play
Their part in the drama just begun:

Imperial Rome did not record
The chief protagonist, Christ the Lord.

But forever upon Time's crowded stage,
Where each little tyrant in his hour
Rants through this scene with brutish power—
Looms the Christus role in every age—

For hope in the human heart turns toward
The Christ-in-man and Christ the Lord.

Books And Things

By Edward Angly

The Red Road.

Surveying the class struggle at home and overseas, John Strachey, one of the most articulate British disciples of Lenin, hails President Roosevelt as the only leader of any recent progressive government who didn't run away when capital seriously began to fight socialistic reforms. The British radical writer and lecturer cites the collapse of Ramsay MacDonald's Labor government in 1931 and Leon Blum's resignation as French Premier in 1937, when French capital went on a stay-in strike, as recent horrible examples of tail-turning by reformers who wouldn't stand up and fight.

In his new book, "What Are We to Do?" (Random House, $3), Mr. Strachey sketches the history of the British and American labor movements, shows the latter how he thinks it may learn from the mistakes of the former, and declares "scientific socialism" to be the one left-wing program that is capable of eventually bringing the capitalists to their knees and happily dividing the means of production and the joys of life. "Scientific socialism" appears to be straight Marxism, undiluted by Fabian or other British compromises.

As Mr. Strachey interprets recent events, the first New Deal Administration was devoted to enacting measures of pseudo-reform character which benefited the capitalists at the expense of the workers. Among these he names NRA, the AAA and the devaluation of the currency. The second Roosevelt Administration has so far, he thinks, been devoted to "genuine reforms which benefit the mass of the population at the expense of the capitalists," these including the Wagner act, wage-and-hour legislation, unemployment insurance and social security legislation.

And where do we go from here? Mr. Strachey seems to think that if the labor and agricultural forces know their political onions, they can weld the progressives of the middle classes to the reds and pinks and win the battle against "the American capitalists' hysterical reaction to Mr. Roosevelt's liberalism."

How to woo into a People's Front the middle class of professional, commercial and scientific salaried men and women ever has been a problem, he grants, to the militant working-class movement. He thinks labor movements have made a mistake in steering well to the right and damping down their more vigorous activities in fear of losing middle-class support. It was equally a mistake, he argues, for the labor movement to think the middle class wasn't worth winning, anyhow.

That may have seemed feasible in the ordinary times when social and international relaxation prevailed, but ordinary times are likely to be extraordinarily rare in the future, Mr. Strachey believes. Today, he says, the middle class, lying between two struggling forces, has "private inclinations" toward the left. When it comes to choosing sides the dominant consideration of the poor devil in the middle will be not only "which side do I want to win?" but "which side is going to win?" With a superb example of understatement that no middle-class Russian of the old days would deny, Mr. Strachey remarks that "it is not a pleasant thing to be on the losing side in the class struggle."

It seems that it is no longer fashionable in Communist circles to talk of "boring from within." Quite a number of us in the middle classes had observed how "the party" in the United States began, a year or so ago, to pay pretty tributes to Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln, and to soft-pedal the Stalin stuff. It was only the other day that Earl Browder's crowd went out soliciting "co-operation" from—of all the people—the Roman Catholic clergy and laity. The invitation, it seems, was declined—without thanks.

Instead of babbling about "boring from within" the labor movement, your up-to-date Red, Mr. Strachey reports, simply talks of "working in" or "with" a trade union or other organization. "The change of phrase is important," he remarks. "If you talk of 'boring from within,' you suggest (however erroneously) a destructive process by which the thing bored into will be harmed. If, on the other hand, you talk of working in an organization, you suggest that you will be trying to help and strengthen it, while, of course, using your undoubted right to attempt to influence it . . . Communists have learned the lesson that it is no use calling a man a traitor, even if proof of his treachery is complete, if there is no chance that you will be believed. For to do so will merely rally support for the individual so accused. It is far better gravely to understate the true facts of the case, if by so doing conviction can be brought to a far larger number."

Unemployment Taxes

By Henry Ellenbogen

Reduction Argued Unjustified.

A suggestion has recently been advanced to reduce the contributions to the District unemployment compensation fund. Having drafted and sponsored the unemployment compensation law, Henry Ellenbogen maintains an interest in its operation even though he resigned from Congress last January to take office as judge of the Court of Common Pleas at Pittsburgh, Pa. His comments on the proposal follow.

RECENTLY the director of the District Unemployment Compensation Board has recommended to the District Commissioners that the unemployment compensation tax for the District of Columbia be reduced in view of the fact that about $4 is being collected in contributions for each dollar being paid in benefits and a reserve has been accumulated of approximately $7,000,000.

Evidently no consideration has been given to the opposite possibility of increasing benefits, instead of reducing taxes. A few facts will easily demonstrate that this is the direction in which changes need to be made.

SO FAR, since benefits first became payable in January, about 18,500 claims have been allowed and about 98,000 weekly benefit checks have actually been issued. This means that only a little over five weeks' of benefits have been paid, on the average, to workers whose claims were allowed, although the maximum duration of benefits allowed under the law is 16 weeks. In addition, the average weekly check has been only a little over $8.50. It is obvious that this is very inadequately meeting the needs of unemployed workers. Although, undoubtedly, many workers get new jobs before they exhaust their rights to benefits, it is very probable that the large majority of unemployed workers are exhausting their rights to benefits long before they receive new employment.

The remedy is to strike out of the law the provision which limits the claimant to one week of benefits to each three weeks' of previous employment so that he would be able to draw the maximum duration of benefits specified in the law, if he remained unemployed that long.

IN ADDITION, the present maximum duration of 16 weeks could well be extended to a maximum of 26 weeks. The District of Columbia unemployment compensation law passed the House of Representatives providing for a minimum of 26 weeks' benefits with a possible extension of 10 more weeks for workers who had been under this system up to six years. This was reduced by the Senate to a maximum of 16 weeks, with a possible 10 additional weeks for those employed steadily for five years.

It is true that the maximum amount of benefits provided in any State law is 20 weeks, but this limitation on benefits was not made because a longer duration was not desirable, but only because consulting actuaries estimated that no longer duration of benefits could be provided with a contribution equivalent to 3 per cent of the pay roll. This has been disproved in the case of the District of Columbia.

• • • •

NO SYSTEM of unemployment compensation will really meet the problem of unemployment adequately unless it provides maximum duration of benefits of at least 26 weeks. If unemployment lasts beyond that time the only feasible remedy is to provide public work or relief, but this will happen only in a small minority of cases, except in prolonged depressions. In minor depressions, 90 per cent of the unemployed get back to work within 26 weeks.

In addition, the average weekly benefit of $8.50 is obviously too low. The District law is unique in that it provides a basic benefit equal to only 40 per cent of former weekly earnings, whereas, all State laws provide 50 per cent. The District law, it is true, in addition provides dependents' allowances up to a maximum of 65 per cent of the former weekly wage, but evidently this does not serve to build up the average benefit to an adequate amount. The basic benefit should be raised to at least 50 per cent of former earnings.

• • • •

TO SUM UP, the fact that the District of Columbia unemployment compensation fund is being less heavily drawn on than other State unemployment compensation funds, should not be made an excuse for reducing contributions, but rather for liberalization of benefits to an amount which more adequately meets the needs of the unemployed. It would be extremely unfortunate if the other alternative were taken of reducing contributions, as is now being considered by the District Commissioners.

Canon Stokes Asks Audience to Live Up to 'Our Father'

If we would all live up to the implications of "Our Father"—the first two words of the "Lord's Prayer,"—the world would soon be transformed, Canon Anson Phelps Stokes, of the Washington Cathedral, said yesterday, speaking over station WRC on the daily religious broadcast.

"No teaching is so significant as the fatherhood of God," pointed out the cleric, who urged his listeners not to think in terms of their own needs, but in the needs of their fellowmen, irrespective of race, creed or color.

The "Lord's Prayer," he said, is better known than any hymns, songs or literary sayings, has been translated into over 1,000 languages, is the first thing translated by missionaries, and is the first thing taught to children in the home.

Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld will deliver a half-hour sermon Saturday at noon, over the same station, and also on succeeding Saturdays.

Officials at the Weather Bureau gave no promise of relief from the heat wave. Today, they predicted, will see little change in temperature. The sky will remain cloudy and there possibly may be summer showers.

Wayne K. Wilson, 29, of 503 Seventh street southeast, was overcome while he was at work on a WPA playground job at Thirty-seventh and O streets northwest. He was taken to Emergency Hospital.

Hazel B. Jones, 52, of 633 Ingraham street northwest, collapsed last night in front of 1418 F street northwest. She was taken to Emergency Hospital, treated for heat exhaustion and returned to her home.

Heat and cooling weather checkboarded the United States last night—but the heat and dryness held the upper hand. After dusk rain—from light to heavy—fell in many sections. However, it skipped Missouri, where moisture was needed badly to prevent serious damage to crops, and the forecaster predicted even warmer weather there.

Rising temperatures were predicted for Maryland, the Great Lakes region, Minnesota and other scattered areas. Down in the South normal summer weather was expected. New York State and Iowa found some relief from the heat through fitful showers, the Associated Press reported, while thunder storms brought surcease to southeastern Pennsylvania and Indiana.

While the heat caused industries in several cities to close, a storm so darkened Philadelphia and its suburbs that lights were turned on in offices and homes. Clouds brought showers to sunbaked Manhattan and its buroughs.

In angry contrast to sultriness, a violent storm broke out over almost 1,000 square miles in Eastern Quebec. Three persons were killed. The Associated Press put property damage there at $250,000.

In Maine, Texas, California and the Dakotas the mercury shot into the 90's.

New England was hard hit, with readings in the 90's—and 11 deaths, six drownings and five from prostrations within the past 24 hours. New York's metropolitan area sweltered for its eleventh consecutive day, with humidity rising.

Justified pride shone from the face of Harold Crooks as he sat in the Mayflower Lounge Wednesday. He'd just made a record flight of 68 minutes back from Newark to the Lounge, after bidding bon voyage to RFC boss Jesse Jones and Mrs. Jones and Federal Housing Administrator Stewart McDonald, who sailed on the Normandie. "Maybe I should have called it the 'Sledge Hammer,'" said Einhart, taking a sip.

Brown Drives To Stop Child Traffic Deaths

Traffic

part in stopping these tragedies by keeping children off the streets. The District has opened its playground in the hope the children will spend their playtime on them rather than in the streets.

And as these appeals for city-wide safety came from city District authorities, graphic word-pictures of the horrible child mishaps which have shocked the Capital were painted by witnesses at the District Morgue.

In rapid succession, a Coroner's Jury decided that three recent traffic deaths—two of them children—were accidental. Negligence on the part of the children was blamed for the accidents.

Little Mary Edna Robinson, 4-year-old daughter of Robert E. Robinson, 3207 Seventh street northwest, was killed Wednesday beneath the wheels of a truck in the 1000 block of M street northwest. The jury's verdict exonerated Robert Tinsley, driver of the truck. Mary Edna, witness said, darted into the street to follow her father who was going to a grocery store.

The jury held also that Winslow Minor Coles, colored, 14, was killed also by his own negligence when he ran his coaster wagon in front of another truck Tuesday near Twentieth and Belmont road northwest. Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald was told the colored boy had scoffed at warnings of danger just before darting into the street. Theodore Washington, colored, 1233 Second street southwest, driver of the truck, said he failed to see the boy.

Earlier, the jury absolved Hyman Melman, 1103 Queens street northeast, of blame in the death of John Linder, 78, 304 Fourth street southeast, who was struck July 23. Linder, said witnesses, walked in front of Melman's car.

Robinson, father of Mary Edna, sat tensely on the witness stand as he described how his little girl was killed. He gripped the side of his chair as he told the jury Mary Edna was the most careful of his six children about crossing the street. He fought to control his emotions when he related how she ran into the line of moving traffic to reach his side.

"I called to her," said Robinson, "but I guess she didn't hear me. She was running when I saw her."

In the Coles case, a playmate testified that he warned the boy not to run his wagon past a stop sign at Twentieth street, but Winslow only laughed.

William Baylor, colored, 68, of 327 C street southwest, died at Emergency Hospital early this morning of injuries received when he was struck by an automobile July 30 in the 200 block of Fourth street southwest. His death was the fifty-eighth in District traffic this year.

Police said the automobile was driven by Clarence Gowell, colored, 42, of 496 M street southwest.

Three men were injured, one of them seriously, when their car crashed into a bridge on the Southern Maryland Pike, ten miles beyond Marlboro, Md., early today. The automobile burned after the collision.

The injured, all taken to Providence Hospital, are James Darr, 20, of 419 I street northeast, in a serious condition with first degree burns over his entire body; Ralph Hayden, 22, of 1019 Third street northeast, admitted for treatment for brush burns and a cut forehead; Norval Seaborn, 20, of 926 Fourth street northeast, released after treatment for brush burns.

Postal Inspectors Held 'Heroes' in Club Talk

Postal Inspectors are "unsung heroes," Harold F. Jones, of the solicitor's office of the Postmaster General's Office, asserted in an address before the Cosmopolitan Club, at its luncheon meeting at the Carlton Hotel.

One of the main problems confronting the department, the speaker said, was keeping objectionable matter out of the mail. Arthur W. Defenderfer won the attendance prize, which was donated by the club's president, Dr. J. L. B. Murray.

CLASSIFICATION 98

The GENTLER SEX

By Malvina Lindsay.

Leisurely Lunch.

The doctor is right. You have been rushing too much. Especially at meals. The thing to do is to take a nice long leisurely lunch hour . . . go off to some quiet restaurant, relax completely and eat slowly—very, very slowly . . . like a civilized human being. The people in the tropics have the right idea. Nobody but mad men—and women—like yourself ever dash around in the heat.

• • • •

You pass haughtily by your old lunch counter, enter an impressive restaurant and seat yourself in state behind a white tablecloth. It is 1 o'clock. You will stay parked there at least until 2 . . . then stroll slowly back to the office poised, calm, rested. What a fool you have been all these years! Dashing out to get a sandwich and a cup of coffee in 15 minutes! As if the office couldn't run without you!

• • • •

You sip your jellied consomme slowly. Ah, this is the way to eat . . . leisurely, relaxed . . . like a sophisticated gourmet. What barbarians Americans are! It is now 1:10. When you get back you must call the Cheatham Co.—say did you call Putter & Putter this morning? No, you forgot! And that Miss Testy at Hatchers' who left her number! She'll be furious! Well, you'll get right on to them when you get back at 2—or maybe a little before.

You are attacking your lamb chop energetically. Come! Come! You must slow up! You've all the time in the world. Oh yes, and you must call that Mr. Hack of Brazen & Brazen! and that man at Grubb Brothers—Oh why WILL you keep thinking about the office?

• • • •

Still—what will they do if that call you were expecting from the Flint Co. comes in? . . . Oh well, let 'em call back. Then there's Mr. Clipper, he was hunting you for a conference . . . and what if the boss should take a notion . . .

You are chewing your lamb chop furiously. Wait! This won't do! You will Fletcherize! Count 30 on each bite. One . . . two . . . three . . . four . . . Heavens, this is driving you wild!

It would be just like the boss to be calling you . . . he never fails when you are out. And you were gone yesterday when he was in. Oh, well, let him wait! You are going to stay in this restaurant until 2 o'clock—well, anyway until 1:45 if it kills you.

• • • •

You toy daintily with your salad. What if Miss Jenks would want to start in on that new work? And part of it's in your desk. And what if Grace Minch should call back for that address you promised her? Oh, and what if the man came to fix the typewriter?

You look at the clock. One-twenty. Well, even if you stayed at the restaurant until 1:30—that would be a whole half hour.

The waitress brings your ice cream. You muster your will power and take a tiny bite. Well, if you get back to the office by 1:35, you can get all that old work cleared up by 3——oh, there you go again! Still—if you don't get those things out of the way today, you'll be tied up tomorrow——

You feel an uncontrollable urge to rush from the restaurant. You see your desk piled high with papers. A half dozen people are waiting before it, important documents in their hands. The telephone is ringing. The boss is striding in looking angrily around. A messenger boy dashes in with a telegram——

You can stand it no longer. You bolt your ice cream and signal frantically for the waitress. "My check, please! Quick!"

New Molded Shoes Make Feet Look Smaller

ALL WOMEN will seem to have Cinderella feet this fall due to the skill in designing the new footwear. Gone are the heavy buckles, the lacings, the old elastic gorings and everything else that made shoes—and feet—look stiff, heavy and cumbersome. The new shoes are pre-eminently soft, graceful and molded to the feet. Not only do they give greater comfort, but their glove-like fit actually makes the foot seem smaller. Above are shown four attractive, new styles for varied occasions. At upper left is a tailored step-in in lightweight suede with a soft toe and a fringed collar trim of leather. May be worn with tweeds and sports-like ensembles. At upper right is a glove molded oxford silhouette that slips on the feet like a pump. The ideal shoe to be worn with the first black dress of fall. At lower left is a truly miraculous opera pump with no cutting at the instep and no slipping at the heel. It looks poured on the foot because the entire shoe is of lastex suede. At lower right is a lastex high-cut step-in with open toe and patent trim, the perfect shoe for early fall.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: We are a group of teachers who are growing into old maids and do not like the idea. When we graduated from high school our parents advised us to prepare for teaching as we could get this training free and later be placed to earn a living. We loved children and thought we would be happy in our work. Throughout our training we were so discouraged, nagged and overworked that many in the class left school or had nervous breakdowns.

• • • •

We had little time for dates. Our parents said that many professional people had hardships at first but that after we were regularly appointed teachers we would find things more pleasant; that we would recapture time and energy for parties and so on. Well, we survived and were among the few chosen as teachers. Naturally we worked hard to please our superiors, but it was not long before we found that the officials were more exacting than our instructors had been.

• • • •

We had less time for recreation than before. Time that should have been devoted to outdoor sports and parties was consumed in meetings, lectures, conferences, study groups, etc., and after the term's end, summer courses were urged. Summer vacations were often spent in school. Money that should have gone for beautification had to be used to buy a victrola, library books, plants, curtains, pets and other materials for our classrooms.

• • • •

Last summer, after looking at our ratings, we reached the conclusion that regardless of what we do professionally, we shall always be criticized and may expect little reward for effort. So we decided not to spend the summer in study or research. We did not join any clubs to uplift society nor did we go on any teachers' excursions. We bought ourselves some clothes and went to a beach.

• • • •

We had a good time amongst ourselves, trying to play again. But only two of us seemed attractive to men, and none of us received any invitations to nearby parties. (We think we might have been left out because we do not drink). We are planning a similar trip this summer. Have you any suggestions to make us more popular? O. M.

Shun the Pack.

DEAR O. M.: The first suggestion I have to offer for breaking down resort society's tacit resistance to your timid overtures is this—do away with that deadly combination known as "a bunch of old maid school teachers on vacation." Don't any of you go on vacation with fellow teachers, if you can help it; and particularly not in groups of half a dozen, more or less. And, for the matter of that, don't go with any group of habitually manless women. Either team up for your vacation with some lady "live wire" from another profession, or with a young married friend, or go it alone.

• • • •

Perhaps the last-mentioned idea is the best. You can't really externalize your potentialities as a magnetic personality until you are altogether on your own in a new environment, free to react to new acquaintances on spontaneous impulse without wondering. "What on earth will Jane think of me?" Or, "I'm sure Sara thinks I've lost my mind." Or, "But if I did so and so, how could I explain it to the girls? I'd never live it down."

• • • •

I once heard an acutely perceptive, sardonically clever man say (and I have lived to see his theory proved, time and again) that the woman or girl who goes her own way socially, for the most part, free from chummy alliances with a best woman friend or several best girl friends; a woman who seems to belong to herself, and not to a figurative sort of ambulatory sewing circle, is the woman who eventually attracts the society of men.

• • • •

I think this is particularly true of the woman who has passed high school and college age. It is natural and suitable that teen-age and college age girls should travel in packs, or in twosomes, threesomes or foursomes. But an older woman, who has attained to the age of discretion which invests her with the unquestioned right to come and go unattended and unchaperoned, has likewise, presumably, developed individualistic tastes, interests and objectives which make it natural and suitable for her to chart a social course that is uniquely her own.

• • • •

If she continues to lean heavily on the companionship of women for social and moral support, men are apt to pass her over for the reason that, without realizing it themselves, they intuitively conclude she is not "a man's woman;" that she is socially inept and emotionally inexperienced; that she either doesn't know "what it's all about," or is too spiritless or indifferent to play a cheerful or adventurous social game which includes the male of the species."

• • • •

Now, for another thing—if you aren't expert swimmers or don't look exceptionally well in bathing togs or abbreviated play suits, don't try the beach again this year. If you happen to look well in riding clothes, or tennis garb, or golf wear—go some place where you can wear these garments, and take lessons while you are there. Put up at a good hotel that gives you a smart address and offers some facilities for entertaining a beau, in case you have the good fortune to acquire one. Don't do the rustic camping act in a cabin or cottage.

Or you might try a cruise or lake trip, if moist air curls your hair into fetching tendrils and brings a brilliant bloom to your cheeks. Get yourself some knockout summer tweeds or sweater suits, and a few books and magazines of a smartly modern type of content, and display yourself to advantage on deck during the course of the trip. And while on vacation let it be forgotten by yourself and undiscovered by whomsoever you meet (until ties of friendship have been firmly knotted, at least) that your profession is that of teaching. If asked, make a smiling mystery of it. Say that you're here to forget shop; and then deftly switch the conversation into other channels.

Incidentally, I notice you speak of "we" and of "our parents." This suggests the possibility that you may have a sister, or possibly more than one sister, who also teaches; which in turn suggests the possibility that you may have gone vacationing last summer with one or more sisters. Again, I say—cut loose from inhibiting influences, of a family or habitual-confrere or long-time intimate type, when you sally forth on your adventure-seeking vacation. Embrace it as an opportunity for getting acquainted with an entirely new side of your own personality, as much as for getting acquainted with other persons.

As I heard a chic, intelligent business woman, with shoals of friends and an interesting choice of beaux, say the other day—"But there's one side of me none of you know. And that is the me who comes to the surface when I get away from the shop and away from Washington and away from everybody I've ever known. I hardly know myself, then; I'm like a kid out of school." And I happen to know—for I've known her three years—that she invariably returns from these annual escapes from routine with at least one more permanent friendship to add to her list.

• • • •

One last word—if you find that disinclination to drink is inimical to popularity when the holiday spirit prevails, then take occasion, while on vacation, to learn how and what to drink. And by that I mean to say, find out what gentle potions are best suited to your palate and nervous system. Drinking is a finer social art than guzzling nauseous cocktails and intoxicating quantities of high balls. Ask for a wine list and go over it carefully with the waiter or some other person whose judgment is to be trusted. You are sure to find some harmless refreshment listed there, with which to make the saving social gesture; and such a spirit of inquiry on the part of a vacationing teacher is not open to indictment by anyone, the most carping superior included. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Dyes of Clothing May Be Allergic To Some Persons

'Dress Dermatitis' Manifests Itself in Skin Eruptions.

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Allergy, or hypersensitiveness, which we have been discussing this week in connection with hay fever, may have many peculiar manifestations. Often puzzling are the skin eruptions that can come from articles of clothing.

"Dress dermatitis" is an entity that should be easily recognized because it consists in an eruption, usually from a dye in the dress, that occurs in sharply localized parts of the skin—places where the dress most often touches and where perspiration may dissolve the dye. These places are around the armpits, the fold of the arms, and the neck. The eruption may extend over the chest, but only to the line where the underclothes come to protect the skin. The eruption has all the features of eczema—an itching, weeping crusting inflammation.

The eruption around the armpits is most characteristic—it affects the sides and periphery of the armpits, not the pit. This is markedly different from other skin diseases which affect the top of the pit especially.

While the material—silk or wool—of the dress is sometimes responsible, it is usually the dye. This is proved by patch tests—when the dye is laid directly on the skin and covered with adhesive plaster, and left there an hour, the characteristic eruption appears on that spot. Blue dresses are most often incriminated, although this is not absolute, and in one patient a blue, a black and a green dress all produced the eruption.

Shoe dermatitis is another form of clothing sensitiveness. People with this have an eruption that resembles athlete's foot. And as a matter of fact, many of them are treated for a long time for athlete's foot, until the true cause is discovered. The eruption is likely to be on the side and sole of the foot. The leather, the linings and brown and black shoe polish have all been found responsible as the cause. One man was found who was sensitive, as shown by the patch test, to leather from 17 different shoes. He has to wear canvas foot covering.

Sock dermatitis also occurs, and should be easy to spot because the distribution of the rash is exactly that of contact with the sock. Dyes rather than the material of which the sock is made are the cause, and the cure, logically enough, is to wear white socks.

Women Who Keep Slim Figures Most Baffling to Age Guessers

Boardwalk Experts Also Say Bulky Persons Weigh Less and Trim Ones More Than Expected; Muscles Heavier Than Fat.

By Ida Jean Kain.

THE guess-your-weight business, indigenous to the boardwalks, is based on pure psychology. We all want to know if we look our weight and are glad to pay a dime to find out.

I have often wondered how the weight guessers could hit the nail on the head every time and collect their dime, so I talked to Murray Goldberg, who guessed the weight of an almost unbelievable number of people at the last World's Fair and who was right 75 per cent of the time. How does he do it?

"Intuition! Second nature!" says Mr. Goldberg largely. But when you analyze it, his "second nature" is based on first-hand experience and there is very little guessing about it. He knows at a glance whether you are going to weigh more or less than you look. For, as a rule, "the bulky ones weigh less than anyone would think, and the ones with the trim figures weigh more," he finds.

Takes Them by the Arm.

When in doubt, however, Mr. Goldberg likes to take his cash customer by the arm and escort her toward the scales. This gallantry has a purpose. That gentle grip on the upper arm tells him whether the lady plays bridge or tennis, and he can judge accordingly, because he knows that muscle weighs more than fat and that the lady with firm arms is heavier than she looks.

The section of the country has an effect on weight averages, these boardwalk salesmen have found, and the man from Maine weighs about 5 per cent more than the man of similar build from Alabama. As Mr. Goldberg sees it, "They work harder in the cold climate and are more muscular." At the World's Fair he found a difference in the average weights for various nationalities, which is to be accounted for by the difference in climate and food.

And, regardless of where she comes from, who do you think is most eager to have her weight guessed? The fat lady! She thinks that if she can fool the guesser she can fool anybody, and she is right about that! The woman who is very flabby looks as if she weighs more than she does, the woman with good musculature as if she weighs less.

Guesses Ages, Too.

With the novelty beginning to wear off the weight guessing business, Mr. Goldberg has branched out and is now guessing ages. "It is easy with the men," he claims, "but it is pretty hard to tell about the ladies. They keep so young-looking these days . . . besides, about 25 per cent of them lie about their age, anyway!" (He is getting a lie-detector to take care of that.)

The woman with the good figure is the one whose age is most difficult to guess. If she has exercised consistently she usually looks young for her age, as well as slimmer for her weight, and when you think them over, Mr. Goldberg's tips on weight and age guessing constitute a strong case for exercise.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Aug. 4.

I SUGGEST that until September 1 you walk close to the curb here instead of hugging the big buildings along the better avenues. In this way you may avoid being knocked unconscious by a 10-pound phone book some hysterical typist has forgotten to tear up. So frantically have ocean fliers come, gone and hesitated here lately that the Grover Whalen - Mayor LaGuardia welcome orgies have almost lapped each other, and any day now some dizzy stock broker's clerk is going to throw the tape from the fortieth floor without removing it from the ticker. Look out below, pal. Oops, sorry!

ALICE HUGHES

The British and the Germans and our own Corrigans and Hughes have been skimming around almost every day, and since the amiable and dawdling yokels of our city are pushovers for these welcome parades, they have spent a very happy summer indeed. In fact, the digging of the new Sixth avenue subway has lost a huge slice of its audience during the past month. In addition, we are spoiled by the new time element. We are growing accustomed to buying tomorrow's London Bleat yesterday, thanks to the oceanic kite flying, and if the King of England blows his nose at noon today, by 3 this afternoon I am witnessing the phenomenon at our Grand Central Newsreel Theater, with sound. Never was New York in such a dither of free shows. Those sun spots must be at it again!

Young Hughes, no doubt to his relief, was chased off the first pages by Corrigan so fast that he was back among the want ads with the Chinese war before you could say Lockheed-Vega. Now a handsome Rumanian is set to hop to Bucharest—would have done it long ago if he hadn't run into a cow in Connecticut, or something. It's all daffy, nutty, delightful, and a great boon to our citizens, whose death rate from summer boredom is usually desperate. But look out below!

• • • •

I've just been sent a new type of swimming goggle which, worn on a band around the skull, keeps water completely out of the eyes and thus prevents infection and what not. It is also useful for looking at fish while submerged. All I need now is a new swim suit, since the moths have feasted royally on mine, and a patch of cool water filled with pretty fish. The goggles are in!

Modern Bakery Breads and Pastries Relieve Housewives of Summertime Oven Drudgery

By Alice Clayton,
The Post Food Editor.

WHEN OMAR KHAYYAM pleaded for his loaf of bread and other favors, he craved only the crude porous breads of the East. He would scarcely believe his eyes, or palate, if he should suddenly stumble upon our fine-textured bakery breads of today. Modern women should shout with glee over their freedom from steaming ovens during these sticky Washington summers.

Local homemakers owe much to the vast bakery companies which daily supply fresh bread, rolls, cakes and a host of tempting baked products. Not so many years ago conscientious housewives arose a half hour or so earlier each morning just to prepare the anticipated coffee cake or biscuits for breakfast. Today, at very little expense and a minimum of effort, a grocer is called and sweet high quality bread is delivered fresh for any meal of the day.

From the humble first loaves of bread, made under adverse temperature and sanitary conditions, there has evolved as perfect a food as modern man can eat.

Products Widely Assorted.

There are endless assortments of breads produced by the outstanding bakery's of the country. One leading bakery's products includes over 85 different items. Among the varieties of bread most popular with Washington women are whole wheat, rye, Swedish rye, raisin, cracked or crushed wheat, Vienna twist, Pullman, and a very nice French bread. Sweet buns, biscuits, coffee cake, doughnuts, rolls and cup cakes are purchaseable around Washington reasonably. In fact, today's baked goods are an overwhelming labor and economy saver compared with home-baked breads. One mammoth bakery distributing company is featuring a two-layer whipped cream cake with no shortening save rich whipped cream.

Rolls and biscuits are particularly wise economies at present, for so many smart little tricks can be played with these baked goods as main dishes for breakfast, lunch or dinner. The illustration on this page shows fresh rolls being prepared for the oven, and these can be disguised to do most of the work of tonight's supper by slicing and filling them with sea food, green peas and pimiento and pouring a piquant hot cheese sauce over all. Bakers' cookies and sweet crackers too can be given new life by pouring a fresh fruit custard over several ginger snaps or fruit bars and allowing the dessert to stand in the refrigerator.

The most popular member of the bread family is, of course, the white bakers' loaf. This is the loaf which most deserves the title "staff of life," for it contains nutritive and body-building elements for every member of the family. This hardy food follows us through the natural span of our existance.

Flour Laboratory Tested.

Flour is laboratory tested, for Government standards of foodstuff are high. Other than flour, there is the selection of milk, sugar and shortening as well as pure standard cultured yeast, all of which are given rigid tests for purity and richness. These ingredients are scientifically mixed according to individual company formulas. Sanitary precautions are exacting. As little handling of food as possible is the keynote of the majority of modern food industries, and bakers' bread is no exception, for there are automatic cutters and mixers which mix 1,000 pounds at one time.

The very heart of successful bread-making lies in fermentation and that is where the scientific baker excels the housewife. Thoroughly mixed dough is placed in a fermenting room where pure air is changed every minute and carbon dioxide gases are forced out just as quickly. The mixers containing the dough wear snug ice water jackets, for the temperature of bread in the making is temperamental. Carbon dioxide gases are the most deadly menace to fresh bread for they prevent fermentation.

After the dough has had its airing it is passed through a scaling process which rids it of all unnecessary starchy matter. It is then passed through a rounding machine which forms a skin on the outside, as it sits in "proofs" to harden for 15 minutes. A machine cuts dough into loaf formation next and then it is placed in big greased pans; thence to steam rooms for 45 minutes. This steaming is important to good bread-making as it adds to the lightness of the loaf. In an oven of 350 degrees F. to 450 degrees F. the dough bakes gently until it is of rich, even texture. Slow baking brings out flavor and an all-over even quality, just as slow cooking improves the taste of any food. Is it any wonder that women don't bend over bread boards any more?

Prizes Are Offered For Recipes Using Orange as Flavor

The tangy flavor of the orange has made it one of Americas most versatile fruits, and it is due for a good deal of renewed interest at present, for it is much more reasonable in price than it has been for weeks. Due to its diversity of table uses, it has been selected as the topic for the new recipe contest.

If you know of a completely new method of whipping up an orange fritter, an orange chiffon pie, an orange float or sherbet, or if you have a novel formula for orange salad or stuffing—then don't hesitate to send in a recipe for your favorite orange food.

Mail all tested recipes to Alice Clayton, Post Food Editor, for a prize of $3 for first award, $2 second award or $1 for three additional prizes.

Prize Salads Mingle Beauty and Taste

Miss Mabel Thompson Wins First Place for Her Orange Sea Food Salad.

SALADS have undergone a chic modernization process, as was attested by last week's recipe entries. Washington hostesses keep well abreast of the trend in food styling, for their contest letters, without exception, recommended fresh salads of palatable and optical beauty. The "dernier cri" of these salad suggestions was to blend harmonious ingredients into an inviting picturesque setting.

Several of these edible pictures were so original that they deserve individual mention. One imaginative hostess recommended pineapple butterflies, another a summer flower salad combination, and several recipes called for bright tomato surprises and frozen bananas. One of the most fanciful salad contributions came in the form of Humpty Dumpling who turned out to be a cheerful looking egg squatting on a tomato wall.

There were several hardy salads entered, among them German potato salad, de luxe vegetable, crab and salmon salads, and a delectable jellied chicken cream salad which is a full meal in itself. One entrant advised a delicious raspberry mayonnaise for her pineapple salad.

An interesting observation of the metamorphosis taking place in salads is the use of gelatin aspic for molding purposes, which often places a salad in the role of entree rather than as prelude to dessert and coffee.

Unusual Tang.

Miss Mabel Thompson, 829 Quincy street northwest, receives the first award of $3. Her prize-winning entry combines several pleasing flavors into one piquant salad. The substantial qualities of tuna fish, celery and peas offset the blandness of cream and orange juice. Miss Thompson's inspiration of beautifying this mold by means of crisp water lily garnish is a festive one.

Miss Thompson

ORANGE SEA FOOD SALAD WITH CUCUMBER WATER LILIES.

1 package of lemon gelatin
1¼ cups hot water
6 tablespoons of orange juice
¾ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1 7-ounce can of tuna fish
1 cup cooked peas, drained
½ cup thin cream
1 cup diced celery

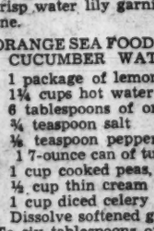
Dissolve softened gelatin in water. To six tablespoons of it add orange juice. Pour the orange gelatin into a 7-inch mold. When firm, lay on top a few slices of lemon. Chill the remaining lemon gelatin until beginning to thicken. Stir in the flaked tuna and other ingredients and pour into a mold. Chill in refrigerator and unmold on crisp water cress.

WATER LILIES.

Halve crosswise three 5-inch cucumbers. Remove the centers. Cut down six times to within ¼ inch of the bottom. Cut between green and white, making two rows of petals. Point them. Leave the lilies in ice water until opened. Drain. Fill with cream cheese. Make three pink and three yellow. Arrange on a mirror plate with the salad in the center. Pass tartar sauce or mayonnaise.

More Snow White Majic.

Miss Nora O'Connor, 3240 Hiatt place northwest, wins the second award of $2. Her recipe is one of those amusing flights of fancy which would delight any guest, aged 4, on up. The influence of Walt Disney's immortal heroine and her seven heroes is at work even in the salad bowl, for Miss O'Connor has named her recipe after the fairy tale characters. She remarks that her salad is an original one as well as being a delicious blend of sweets and fruits.



Miss N. O'Connor

SNOW WHITE AND SEVEN DWARFS SALAD.

Ingredients for one serving:
½ pear, canned or fresh
1 marshmallow
1 stewed prune
7 small cone-shaped gum drops
7 dates
Walnuts, salted or unsalted
Maraschino cherries
Chocolate confetti
Lettuce

Place on individual salad plates shredded lettuce; then the half pear, the cut side on the plate. Cut a thin slice, about a quarter of an inch, off the marshmallow and shape the remainder like a face at the stem end of the pear. Set pieces of chocolate confetti on the marshmallow for eyes and nose, and a small slice of maraschino cherry for mouth. The pitted stewed prune is draped around the marshmallow to represent hair.

Stuff the seven dates with nuts and set in a semicircle around the pear. Cut a thin slice off the bottom of the gum drops and place the top on the stuffed date for dwarf caps.

Salad Luxury.

Third prize of $1 goes to Mrs. Lyda A. Smith, 302 Amherst street, Winchester, Va. Her recipe is at once simple and elegant. Mrs. Smith's chicken salad puffs are so rich and satisfying that, with beverage and dessert, an ample meal would be achieved. When in a menu rut, this puff paste could be prepared to house a variety of inexpensive vegetables or left over meat salad.

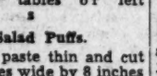
Mrs. L. A. Smith.

Chicken Salad Puffs.

Roll good puff paste thin and cut into pieces 4 inches wide by 8 inches long. Roll, then stuff each roll with soft paper to keep its shape. Seal with white of an egg. Bake delicate brown. When cold pull out paper and fill with finely chopped, rich chicken salad, dipping ends in whipped cream, then dip in powdered almonds. Serve two on lace doily or a salad plate for a serving. Prepare the chicken as follows: To 2 cups cold boiled chicken, finely diced and all skin and bone removed, allow 1 cup blanched celery, finely diced. Mix and add 1 sweet pickle chopped, 2 hard boiled eggs, chopped fine, and ½ cup blanched and sliced very thin almonds. Mix all and sprinkle with French Dressing and let marinate for an hour. Then drain off any liquid that may have accumulated and mix with a rich, well seasoned mayonnaise on salad greens.

Buffet Suggestion.

Fourth prize of $1 has been awarded to Mrs. Charles M. Stevenson 509 I street northeast. Although a variety of cooling vegetable salads were entered, her indorsement of tongue and cucumber, artichoke and avocado was considered particularly crisp and appetizing. The addition of curry powder, garlic, tabasco and Worcestershire to basic oil dressing adds verce to the salad ingredients.



Mrs. Stevenson.

Vegetable Salad and Dressing for Buffet Supper.

Tomato slices, avocado slices
Artichoke hearts, cucumber slices
Shredded lettuce, watercress
Bermuda onion slices, cottage cheese

Miss Nora O'Connor Gets Second Award With Fanciful Dish.

Arrange the vegetables over a bed of shredded lettuce and watercress. Place the slices of vegetables in overlapping fashion, such as slice of tomato, slice of avocado, slice of cucumber, artichoke heart, and then a slice of Bermuda onion around the edge of the platter. In the center place a mold of cottage cheese mixed with a little sour cream, salt, pepper and a small quantity of celery seeds. It is also nice to add small curled anchovies to the vegetable edge by tucking them between the vegetables, or place on top. Serve the following dressing for the vegetables separately.

Dressing.

1 part white vinegar, 3 parts olive oil
Salt and pepper to taste, dash of paprika
Dash of tabasco sauce, dash of Worcestershire sauce
1 tablespoon of curry powder; 1 clove of garlic.

Rub the bowl with the garlic, and mix the other ingredients together in the bowl. Let the dressing stand long enough in the bowl to get the flavor of the garlic. If it is not used immediately let the garlic clove stay in the bowl. Then pour in small dressing bowl. The curry powder gives the dressing an unusual tang.

Tiers of Salad.

Mrs. Thomas Linnane, 4907 V street northwest, has also been adjudged a prize of $1. She co-ordinates her assortment of vegetables with onion and tomato juice. There is a final fillip of icing the sides of the layer cake salad with cream cheese, which at once puts guests in a receptive frame of mind for such a pretty dish.

Layer Cake Salad.

4 tablespoons gelatin
¾ teaspoon salt
½ cup diced cucumbers
3 tablespoons grated green peppers
⅔ cup grated raw carrots
1 cup tomato juice, hot
½ cup diced raw tomato
1 tablespoon onion juice
1½ packages cream cheese
Stuffed olives

Add 2 tablespoons dissolved gelatin to 2 cups hot water and ½ teaspoon salt. Divide into two equal portions. When beginning to set, add to one portion the cucumber and peppers; to the other the grated carrots.

Add 1 tablespoon dissolved gelatin to tomato juice with ¼ teaspoon salt, the onion juice and diced tomato. Into a wet oblong mold pour the tomato layer. Add 1 tablespoon dissolved gelatin to the cheese and spread a thin layer on the tomato. When set, pour on the cucumber layer, then the cheese, and lastly the carrot layer, allowing each to become set. Ice the top and sides with the cheese and decorate with thin slices of stuffed olives. Pass a preferred vegetable dressing.

CONSUMERS' COUNSEL

Constructive Suggestions Aplenty Are Contained in Letter From Mrs. Charles N. Malone for Assistance of the Inexpert.

SEVERAL constructive suggestions have been received by the Consumers' Counsel this week from Mrs. Charles N. Malone, Woodley Park Towers. Mrs. Malone's letter to the Food Editor is most helpful, and more contributions of this nature would be welcomed. Mail your ideas or criticisms to Consumers' Counsel in care of Alice Clayton, Food Editor. Here is Mrs. Malone's letter:

"Dear Miss Clayton: I am so glad to see that The Post has a food editor. I have missed that page since Jean Green went away, and was just beginning to wonder whether the paper could long be without these culinary helps which we have become accustomed to, and which every city paper must have regularly.

"Although I did not know Miss Green personally I had an acquaintance of a sort with her, because I am also interested in the subject of foods, and we often had telephone conversations concerning things of the sort. Occasionally she called me for suggestions. Most of my activities have been in connection with club work and not done professionally, but that, and housekeeping, has given me a background worth while, as you can guess. I have a friendly feeling for food and a flair for preparing original dishes which my friends like.

"May I suggest something about the Forum? Although the ideas presented are the responsibility of the contributor, I believe they should be checked for inconsistencies, as young and inexperienced housekeepers take a recipe verbatim. For example, the recipe for sherbet made from fruit cocktail gives so little idea how much fruit cocktail should be used. The cans are of varied sizes, you know. Too much or too little could be used, spoiling the thing completely.

"Since I am living in an apartment for the first time in my life I feel that there is a great opportunity for one in your shoes to offer suggestions, helpful rather than artistic perhaps, to women who work and yet try to prepare meals at home. Very practical hints on well balanced and simply prepared foods and desserts without much frills. These can be very effective and offer room for individual and original attainment. A contest along this particular line should prove interesting and might bring forth much favorable comment from the readers. Meals do not have to be drab and grubby—it is an achievement to accomplish something unusual with brain, plus as little brawn as possible. Stress the one hot dish style of thing. It can be so interesting and very worth while. Working girls overdo the sandwich style of food, I think. I should like to see you put on a contest, giving prizes for menus—centered around the one hot dish idea for dinner this hot weather.

"Much of the preparation of the chef d'oeuvre could be done before office hours, or at night even with good result. Housekeeping in this gilded city on the Potomac is different from housekeeping in Podunk, for example. I feel sure that something of this sort would be very popular and create interest in your column.

Vegetables in Aspic.

1 can consomme (about 2 cups)
1 rounded teaspoon gelatine dissolved in water
1 tablespoon vinegar
A few spoonfuls each of shredded cabbage, chopped carrots, cooked and diced potatoes, sweet green peppers, canned green peas and chopped onion (if desired)
Some red pimento to add color.

"Heat consomme to boiling point and add gelatine and vinegar. Allow it to cool, and just before it begins to jell add the vegetables with seasoning to taste and allow to congeal in a square pan about an inch deep. Chill until very firm, cut in squares and top with mayonnaise on a bed of lettuce

"It can be made very attractive if served surrounded by slices of cold meat and cheese decorated with water cress and olives, with heaps of bread and butter sandwiches on ends of platter. With a hot drink and a simple dessert it is indeed a whole and satisfying meal."

'Keep-Coolers' Meet At Army-Navy Club

Younger Social Lights Gather in Full Force for Regular Afternoon Get-Together; Try to Overcome Heat and Still Stay in or Near Washington.

The problem of how to stay in or near Washington and still manage to keep cool finds its answer almost any afternoon at the Army-Navy Country Club, where a sizable group of younger social lights meet in full force for their regular afternoon get-together. Having a gay time and forgetting about the rising temperature—even while staying outside in the sizzling sun—are two means to an end with this crowd, the end, of course, being to pass the torrid season in the most pleasant manner possible.

Styling themselves the "Keep-Coolers," this set of "service" sons and daughters congregate on the sunny lawn of the club every day shortly after noon. A dip in the poplar-lined swimming pool is followed by a sun bath and long, cool limeades while the entire group listens to the dulcet tones of a slightly battered portable victrola.

As the afternoon progresses, the crowd grows larger and by that time everyone seems to forget the heat as the limeades continue to go the rounds and record after record is played on the portable. "The secret of forgetting the heat, of course, is being in such a congenial group you wouldn't mind sitting on the equator if you had the rest of the gang with you," said one of the popular members of the group yesterday.

Moormans Recent Additions to Group

The most recent additions to the set are Lieut. and Mrs. Harold N. Moorman, the latter of whom was Miss Nancy Ansell. They have just returned to Washington from their honeymoon trip.

Among regular feminine members of the group are the Misses Julia and Peggy Vogel, dashing young daughters of Gen. and Mrs. Clayton B. Vogel; the Misses Nancy and Lillian Kilburn, daughters of Maj. and Mrs. Charles S. Kilburn; Miss Margaret Jeschke, daughter of Maj. and Mrs. R. H. Jeschke; Miss Matile Griswold, daughter of Col. and Mrs. Oscar Griswold.

Of the young men most frequently seen in the crowd there are the "three Bills"—Cadets William Port, William Geldert and William Clay, the latter of whom is the son of Col. and Mrs. Wallace L. Clay; also Cadets Page Smith, Robert Strong and J. B. Bonham—to mention but a few.

New lieutenants—graduates of the 1938 class at West Point are other regulars—some of them spending part of their three-month graduation leave in Washington and finding the Army-Navy Country Club the best place to meet their friends. Lieut. James Lynch, son of Maj. Gen. George A. Lynch, Chief of Infantry, and Mrs. Lynch, is one of this group who recently has been joining the "keep-coolers" regularly.

Still another West Pointer on furlough who has been noted among those present in the past few days is Eben Swift. Other "regulars" are Thomas Trainer, Theodore Sherrill and Roger Taylor. Glimpsed in the crowd yesterday were John Wesley Nice Schulz, jr., son of Col. and Mrs. J. W. N. Schulz, and Kimberly Brabson.

Offers Missed By Their Friends

Members of the feminine contingent who generally may be seen in the group are Miss Ann Campbell, Miss Marian Edwards, Miss Ann Keebler, Miss Joanna Amith, Miss Margaret Almond, Miss Carol Fries, Miss Edith Fitch, Miss Jane Elliott, Miss Margaret Sampson, Miss Harriett Hicklin and Miss Sonya White.

A honeymooning couple who spent much time at the Army-Navy Country Club earlier this season were Lieut. and Mrs. Robert D. Offer, who recently left Washington. Mrs. Offer, the former Miss Frances Nettleton, and her husband are now on the West Coast visiting Lieut. Offer's parents, Maj. and Mrs. Irving D. Offer, in La Jolla, Calif. A sad story comes from the Offers on the West Coast. Thinking they would only be out there for a short time, the young couple sent their heavy winter coats and such to Lieut. Offer's new station, Fort Bennings, Ga. Now he has been ordered to temporary duty in California, and to return by transport to Fort Benning, via New York, late in October, which ought to be coolish weather by that time.

C. A. R. to Rehabilitate 2 Gadsby's Tavern Rooms

One Project Will Be Done in Honor of Mrs. Sinclair and the Other for Mrs. Pouch, Present National Head of Society.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor

Two rooms in Gadsby's Tavern, Alexandria, will be restored and furnished by the Children of the American Revolution, it was announced yesterday at headquarters of the national society. One will be done by the national organiza in honor of Mrs. C. A. Swann Sinclair of Alexandria, past national president of the C. A. R. and now State regent of the Virginia D. A. R., and the other will be furnished by the Virginia C. A. R. in honor of Mrs. William H. Pouch, who is now national head of the society.

Mrs. Pouch, who comes from her home in New York each month to attend to business at her office at Memorial Continental Hall, was here yesterday conferring with membess of various committees.

The room to be restored and furnished as a tribute to Mrs. Sinclair is that in which the famous actress, Anne Warren, died. She was stricken during a performance in the old Alexandria theatre which was patronized by the fashionable people of Washington. She succumbed after being carried to the tavern and was buried in the graveyard of Old Christ Church. Mrs. Lee R. Pennington, historian of the National Society, C. A. R., has been appointed chairman of the committee in charge of furnishing the room.

The one which the Virginia society will restore in Mrs. Pouch's honor is that in which both John Paul Jones and Lafayette stayed. The ballroom of the Tavern also is to be restored as a project of the Virginia State D. A. R., Mrs. Sinclair said yesterday, pointing out the close alliance between the work of the D. A. R. and the children's organization.

Money Being Raised For Building Fund

The national campaign for the erection fund of the proposed new administration building for the C. A. R. is making rapid progress. Since the National Congress of the American Revolution in April, immediately after which the C. A. R. conference was held, there has been $1,000 contributed. The building, for which plans already have been drawn, is to cost $50,000 and a like amount will be sought for its maintenance.

The site has not been selected and no definite steps toward the erection of the building will be taken until after most of the money has been raised. Some of it has come in substantial amounts and other contributions have been small. Both individuals interested in the organization and the chapters throughout the country are working toward the goal.

Mrs. Pouch, in discussing the work of the society, yesterday stressed the wide variety of interests and undertakings it offers its members. In addition to the restoration of rooms in Gadsby's Tavern, they restored the Mary Ball Washington room at Wakefield. This was done in 1932, as the society's bicentennial contribution. Reproductions were used as it was not possible at that time to secure original pieces with which to re-furnish the room. The reproductions are now being replaced with originals. Mrs. John Morrison Kerr, who is of the Wakefield branch of the Washington family, is chairman of the committee in charge of this project and yesterday had just returned from a visit to Wakefield.

Children Sponsor Ships of the Navy

The interest of the young people of the society in heroes and events of the American Revolution as well as in the present national defense of their country, is being encouraged by a plan of sponsoring battleships. This naval idea was worked out by Mrs. Pouch and Mrs. Benjamin Harrison Lingo, chairman of the committee on patriotic education, with the co-operation of the Navy Department.

Ships named for battles or heroes of the Revolution will be forwarded to the Naval Intelligence office, ships' papers, printed cruise letters and other such material which will be sent to C. A. R. headquarters and from there to the chapters in the State to which the ship has been assigned.

Ships, when possible, will be assigned to States where the events transpired or the heroes were born, whose names they bear. The C. A. R.'s will then study this part of Revolutionary history and also will follow news of "their" vessel.

The District of Columbia has been assigned the destroyer U. S. S. Stack. This ship which now is under construction in the Norfolk Navy Yard and will be completed in 1939, is named for Lieut. Edward Stack, who served with John Paul Jones. He was born in Ireland in 1756 and joined the French Navy in 1779, later coming to serve the cause of the colonies.

Mrs. Pouch Will Make Western Tour

The C. A. R.'s also interest themselves in the history of their immediate locality and visit historic places near them. They expect to have a part in one of the celebrations at the "Children's World" in the New York World's Fair. Mrs. Pouch, who is a member of the patriotic societies' advisory committee for the event.

August 15, with Mr. Pouch, the National C. A. R. president, will leave for a western trip, which will take her on a round of the chapters in that section. She will stop first in Chicago and from there go to Colorado, Wyoming, South Dakota, Montana, Washington, Oregon, California, Nevada, and Utah, conferring with State presidents and addressing special meetings planned in connection with her coming. Several of the sessions will be for the purpose of forming organizations for which junior presidents will be elected. William Pennington is State president for the District of Columbia.

Earlene White In 2d Address

Women Must Help Create an International Mind, She Says in Budapest.

Miss Earlene White, president of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, and a resident of Washington, last night discussed "Developing World-Wide Co-operation Among Women" in her second address before the convention of the International Federation of Business and Professional Women, at Budapest, Hungary.

"Women must dedicate themselves to creating an international mind," said Miss White. "We must take off the mental blinders which we wear when we are looking at each other's countries and come to look upon all the nations of the world as a part of the family or nations.

"We must study more carefully the problems of women everywhere in order that the best thinking of the women of the world will help us solve those problems. Those of us who live in countries where the equal suffrage battle has been won must be more interested and alert in helping to fight the good fight for other women's enfranchisement.

"I ask each of you within sound of my voice today to take a pledge that we will not rest until the women of all the nations enjoy political opportunities with men. I predict that when women vote in all lands they will become a political as well as a spiritual force for world peace.

"We must think how best to advance women for high political and appointive office i nour respective countries, but we must be certain not to advocate the elevation of women who are not as well qualified as men. A woman without training, equipment and high ethics in an office of public trust is a menace to the advancement of women everywhere.

"Now let us be practical about this as business and professional women should be and see how we can work along sensible lines to reach these goals. I think you all agree with me that as this world is changing in vital aspects it is becoming a man's and a woman's world instead of a complete man's world. Therefore, in order to advance the ideals which men and women working together hope to accomplish, I think that international organizations of women should work more closely with international organizations of men so that united we may accomplish our goals."

Miss White mentioned the international conference held in March at Chatham House, London, under the auspices of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace which was attended by economists and leaders of opinion from many countries. They united on a series of recommendations to restore confidence throughout the world. International organizations of men are working on this program and it is the basis of the foreign policy of Secretary of State Hull, she said.

Women of Moose Considering Purchasing of New Uniforms

Ritualistic Committee, Led by Mrs. Anna Wagner, Meets in Hall on Revision of Dress for Officers and Escorts.

The ritualistic committee of Columbia Chapter, Women of the Moose, under leadership of Past Regent Mrs. Anna Wagner, met last evening at Moose Hall to discuss the purchase of new uniform dresses for the officers and their escorts. Columbia Chapter has been invited to conduct the initiatory ceremony on the occasion of the annual conclave of the Maryland and Border States Moose Association to be held at Annapolis, September 3, 4 and 5. The class to be initiated at the conclave will be composed of candidates presented by the various chapters of Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia and West Virginia.

Floor-length dresses of white organdy with bouffant skirts and short puff sleeves were chosen, the officers to wear corsages of purple violets and carry large purple chiffon handkerchiefs and their escorts to be dressed similarly except with corsages of red flowers with narrow red ribbon streamers. This will carry out the color scheme of red, white and purple in the Moose emblem.

The Misses Elnora Shaw and Myrtle Turpin have been chosen as the senor regent's escorts, Miss Mildred Blume and Mrs. Samuel Miller as the junior regent's escorts, Mrs. Lawrence Richards and Mrs. J. P. Mitchell as the graduate regent's escorts, and Miss Irma Baker and Mrs. Effie Hardy as the chaplain's escorts.

The officers, their escorts, the guides, Miss Margaret Mitchell and Mrs. Wagner; the Argus, Miss Earle Mitchell, and the sentinel, Mrs. Alice McNulty, rehearsed the initiation under the new ritual last evening, directed by Mrs. Wagner.

Rehearsals will be conducted each Thursday this month in order to perfect the rendition of this ceremony for the Annapolis meeting.

Mrs. Wagner has for a number of years served as ritualistic chairman, and has also been active in many phases of the chapter's program.

Bedtime Stories

By Thornton W. Burgess.

Shadow's Disappointment.

Soon or late to each and all
Disappointment's sure to fall.
—Shadow the Weasel.

It is true. No one can escape disappointments. They come to all of us, no matter how we try to avoid them or guard against them. They are a part of life, an important part, for out of disappointments often grow blessings that otherwise we had missed.

Shadow the Weasel is an independent freebooter. He cares for no one outside his immediate family, nor cares that no one cares for him. Of all the people who hunt others none is more thoroughly hated by his neighbors than is Shadow the Weasel. It is dreadful to hate and dreadful to be hated. To most folks it is, anyway. However, it is not so with Shadow the Weasel. He seems to thrive on hate. Yes, sir, he seems to tarive on hate. Certainly he does nothing to overcome that hate. Why is he so hated? Because he is one who kills beyond his need and in whom there is no mercy. Among the little people of the Green Forest and the Green Meadows it is recognized that some must kill others in order to live, and these are feared without hate. It is those who kill when there is no need who arouse hate. None is hated more than is Shadow the Weasel.

Being a freebooter, killing more than he needs for food, Shadow often travels over considerable territory, here today and there tomorrow. This is because a wasted food supply in a given district means a short supply there for some time to come. But in time Shadow returns to hunt over the same territory again. No one ever knows what that return may be, so those who fear him are never wholly free of the dread of his coming again.

Shadow's appearance running along on the Old Stonewall on the edge of the Old Orchard, was the signal for a great screaming among the feathered folk in the Old Orchard, all of whom gathered in the nearest trees and screamed their loudest. He paid no attention to them. He was used to this sort of thing. He merely ran in and out between stones of the Old Wall, taking care to overlook no opening big enough for a Mouse to enter. If there were any Mice in that wall he meant to have them. But the one he was especially looking for was Striped Chipmunk. He hadn't forgotten that the last time he had visited the Old Wall he had chased Striped Chipmunk right into his home and then somehow had lost him. Striped Chipmunk had played a trick on him and escaped. Just what that trick was he didn't know.

"But I won't be fooled again. No, sir, I won't be fooled again. I'll get him this time as sure as I'm a Weasel," declared Shadow to himself.

When he reached the place on the wall beneath which was the opening to Striped Chipmunk's old home he recognized the place instantly. He disappeared between the stones. He found the doorway to that home and entered. Not having seen anything of Striped Chipmunk outside, Shadow was sure that he would find him inside. He ran swiftly along the long underground passage or hall straight to the bedroom. Shadow's eyes grew red with the lust to kill. The bedroom was empty. What is more, there was something about it that gave Shadow a feeling that it had not been occupied for several days at least. It had a deserted air.

Shadow turned. He moved quickly, for he could hardly move slowly

So Shadow was in a rage as he once more appeared on top of the old wall.

if he tried, but he didn't hurry. He meant to thoroughly explore every passage and room. There were many passages twisting and turning and intersecting, and there were several rooms besides the bedroom. Most of these were storerooms. Everywhere he could smell the Chipmunk odor, but it was stale. Nowhere was it fresh and strong. By the time he reached the entrance to make his way outside Shadow was certain that Striped Chipmunk hadn't used that home recently.

"Either someone else has been ahead of me and caught him or he has moved. He isn't anywhere in or under the Old Stone Wall," muttered Shadow, and ground his teeth in rage, for he was sadly disappointed, and disappointment makes him angry. It works that way with many people. So Shadow was in a rage as he once more appeared on top of the Old Wall.

Welfare Case Workers Plan Meeting Aug. 12

Conference at Lincoln Congregational Church Is Sponsored by Citizens' Committee to Acquaint Agencies With Extent of Co-operation.

Case supervisors of welfare agencies in the District are invited to a meeting next Friday afternoon at the headquarters of the Housekeeping Aid project of the WPA, in the Lincoln Congregational Church, 1701 Eleventh street. The conference is sponsored by the Citizens' Committee, for the purpose of acquainting the various agencies with the extent of which this project is now prepared to co-operate with them.

The Housekeeping Aid has no relation to the household service project which trains workers for domestic strvice. It is designed to prepare women, both white and colored, to go into destitute homes and take charge of the family in event of an emergency such as the illness of the mother. The cases on which they are sent, are referred to the Housekeeping Aid through social agencies and the response has been prompt and efficient in every instance.

The project serves the double purpose of providing work for the housekeeping aides and relieving what is often a desperate situation for a family where there is illness, need of care for the household and no funds to provide it.

Mrs. Minna Adams, supervisor of the project, told of several cases yesterday in her report to the advisory board of the Citizens' Committee, which is headed by Mrs. Willis J. Van Devanter.

An aide went to one family recently where the mother had just been sent to the hospital, leaving several children and an ill husband. The aide found the children almost without clothing and the house with only one chair and that broken. She told the other workers about it when she returned to the headquarters and the next day, from their own meager supply, they brought clothes which they fixed for the children.

Mrs. Adams cited the instance to show the spirit of interest and helpfulness which is general among the women engaged in this branch of service. Themselves beneficiaries of a social service project, they form a body of competent workers in the same field.

The sewing rooms of the WPA provide the uniforms worn by the housekeeping aides, simple kahki-colored dresses with an initial emblem on the arm for street wear and green and white checked apron-dresses to be worn at their work. The aides are equipped with kits containing laundry soap, hand soap, towels, a scrubbing brush, nail brush, cleansing powder and disinfectant. Cleaning often needs to be done in the homes where they are called. There is frequently laundry to be done also, the children to be looked after and food prepared for them. The housekeeping aide takes the place of the mother while she is incapacitated or keeps house in some cases for a person living alone, who is ill and without funds. She is maintained there as long as the emergency exists, whether it is for a period of a week or a month.

The women are trained to cook economically and to use to best advantage provisions such as are supplied from the surplus food stocks or on food orders.

Members of the Citizens Advisory Board consider the project one of the most valuable and far reaching in its benefits conducted by the WPA. It has been under way since last March and in that period enough women have received training so the service may now be extended. The project is ready to provide aid to a larger number of cases than it has up to this time.

Social agencies already are calling upon it freely as a solution for one phase of the problem with which they are confronted in destitute homes where there is no one to take charge of the household due to illness. The Health Department is sponsor and the Citizens Advisory Board the co-sponsor.

The work is carried on under the women's and professional division of the WPA of the District of which Mrs. Mary Steele is director.

Mrs. Bernice Schultz, her assistant, was present at the meeting of the advisory board yesterday. Mrs. Prentiss Wilson, who is treasurer, and Mrs. Ernest Gruening, secretary of the board, also were among those attending. The use of the Lincoln Congregational Church is given for the project, including the kitchen and dining room where the training classes are held.

Miss Griesbauer Fetes Chevy Chase Junior Clubwomen

Miss Margery Griesbauer, chairman of the athletics section of the Junior Woman's Club of Chevy Chase, last evening was hostess to a group of members at tennis and a picnic supper at her home, 6902 Brookville road. Another group will be entertained there later in the month.

The girls assembled at 5 o'clock and enjoyed several lively sets of tennis before dusk. When it was too dark to play longer, they retired to the grape arbor, where tables were set for supper.

Miss Griesbauer was assisted by her sisters, the Misses Jane and Barbara Griesbauer. Section members who were present included the Misses Mildred Chapin, Joan Daskam, Dorothy Roudabush, Elizabeth Waters, Alice Ruth Parks, Edith Farrington, Betty Burklin, Mary Windsor Burklin and Mrs. Ruth White. Miss Nancy Knox also was a guest.

The Federal Diary

By Scott Hart.

'To Be or Not . . .'

Ladies and gentlemen, Pare Lorentz is out of town. He will be back early next week, but there isn't any use in telling him of your talents. Lorentz likes talent, and he admires ambition, too, but he can't do anything about it now.

The whole thing at the moment is a question of appropriation. The new "unit" he heads is now under the National Emergency Council, but all plans for future moviemaking, such as "The Plow That Broke the Plains" and "The River," are in abeyance until the Government's tentative movie-making program is anchored down.

The point, at the moment, is that no actors are wanted. Blondes and brunettes, would-be Hamlets and Jeeter Lesters are flocking to the NEC offices for parts. They have been told that the President has sanctioned Lorentz's splendid idea, but at the moment even Lorentz doesn't know what part he will play, if any.

And besides, the type of pictures which have been made—and future ones would undoubtedly be of similar tone—do not require actors, as such. In any event, Lorentz, isn't looking for talent. His first look is to see where his project stands.

Mail Box.

In our mail box was a communication, as follows:

"Because the General Accounting Office does not carry on the pay roll the job of 'informational director,' it may be stated that GAO is one of the few offices which does not pat itself on the back. If GAO dealt out favorable publicity on the order of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, you would hear about the many excellent investigations being conducted by GAO.

"Unearthing the irregularities necessitating the highest type of personnel, whose qualifications equals that required in the Bureau of Investigation.

"Nearly all employes in the GAO in responsible or investigative positions are qualified in law and/or accountancy. Many are lawyers or accountants. No other agency of the Government can equal the educational requirements of the average GAO auditor whose rating is other than professional. Why is it, then, that with employes of such high standards conducting important investigations in and outside of the Continental limits of the United States, we hear so little about it?

"Certainly there must be plenty. Pursuing the policy of secretiveness in auditing and investigating, nothing ever gets out through regular channels. Would that the writer would be authorized, he could point out many investigations protecting expenditure of Federal funds which would make plenty of copy during the warm weather months.

"Every once in a while, to fill space, there will appear some item (not in The Washington Post) making fun of some decision involving a small amount, but the real work, involving sometimes the savings of millions, will never be made public except at Congressional direction."

"HARRY G. RITNER,
"Editor, Washington Federal Bulletin."

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

CAPITAL CAVIAR

Tid-bits to beguile and awe your visiting cousins from the Hinterland:

Harlan Miller.

There's gold on the outskirts of the Capital, at Great Falls, where veins have been worked not so long ago. Occasionally a Sunday picknicker picks up a nugget, looks around nervously and pockets it.

Tourists may remain in Washington's tourist camp only two weeks. It's so comfortable and handsomely situated on the banks of the Potomac that some would like to live there permanently, as at an estate in the heart of town . . . But most of the 2,250,000 annual visitors stop at hotels.

George Washington optioned land for Government buildings at $66.66 an acre; he was quite a land operator. He got street and highway space free . . . Nowadays the Government pays quite a bit more . . . Incidentally, for 20 years Washington and his family never sat down to dinner without guests.

"—gold in them hills"

You can buy fine bouquets and nosegays on street corners for 50 or 75 cents . . . For 50 years the average summer temperature has been 75 degrees (sounds like a fairy tale) and in winter 35 degrees . . . The Capital is the best shaded city in America.

More Scotch whisky, automobiles and telephones are used per capita than in any city in the world . . . Next to politics, sight-seeing is the principal industry . . . The great hall of the Congressional Library is reminiscent of the Paris opera house.

Washington's handsomest "government" building, the Federal Reserve palace of white marble, does not belong to the Government; it belongs to the member banks, which paid for it . . . But the white-tile roof of the Supreme Court still belongs to the Republic.

But for the grace of God the Washington Monument might have had a fancy circular colonnaded base with a statue of Father George standing in a chariot driving six horses. It might have been as ginger-bready as the Victor Emmanuel Monument in Rome.

"—Beware of the Indians"

Only two of the four great art museums belong to the Government; the other two are privately owned . . . Only four American cities have more Negroes—New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Baltimore . . . Fewer than 1,000 Government officials get as much as $10,000 a year.

Under the new Archives Building great pumps prevent the hidden waters of Tiber Creek from washing away the foundations . . . The Government got the District of Columbia land for a Capital because the citizens of Maryland and Virginia thought it was too swampy to be good for much else . . . Later it gave the Virginia part back to the Virginians. (It may be needed again if the Capital grows as it has lately.)

* * *

A band of Indians lives on the banks of Potomac Creek less than an hour outside of Washington . . . Some of the cave dwellers in the Capital still fear an attack, and go to bed with loaded blunderbusses . . . These are supposed to be the Indians who refused to take the country back in 1932.

D. C. Starts Fight to Keep D. G. S. Taxes

Parley Called for Today to Consider Means of Raising Revenues.

The District Government yesterday filed an answer to the suit of the District Grocery Stores, Inc., to regain $8,000 in taxes paid under protest as District tax experts prepared for a meeting today to consider methods for increasing the municipal revenue.

The answer was filed by Assistant Corporation Counsel Glenn Simmon in reply to a ruling of Justice Jennings Bailey that the grocery corporation was engaged in interstate commerce and so could not be made subject to the business privilege tax.

That plea, Simmon said in his answer, broke down the gross income submitted by the corporation, which amounted to more than $5,000,000. On that the corporation, it was claimed, was due to pay a tax of about $15,799.36, one-half of which was paid under protest. The answer stated the District had no knowledge from the information submitted to it that business estimated at $935,014.51 was done with stores in nearby Virginia and the District.

Burden Charge Denied.

If such a business was actually done, the amount would have to be deducted from the total income before a taxable base could be reached.

"The defendant (District of Columbia) denies that the tax assessed against plaintiff as aforesaid was illegally exacted, or that the said assessment is an undue burden on interstate commerce or that the said act is unconstitutional and void or that the assessment made thereunder cannot properly serve as a basis for the execution of any tax under said act; defendant denies it is indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $1,470.38 or in any other sum" the District's plea stated.

In a recent ruling Justice Jennings Bailey sustained the municipal government on two of the three attacks it filed against the corporation's bill, but ruled favorably for the D. G. S. on the third count, holding that the company was actually doing business in interstate commerce and that the Congress did not have any more authority to burden interstate commerce with a tax than did a State Legislature.

First count of the D. G. S. suit to recoup its taxes was to the effect that it was a voluntary association operating in fact, and in law for no profit as a mere distributing and purchasing agent for some 170 stores. On that point, Justice Bailey ruled with the demurrer filed by the District government, thus voiding the count.

The second count stated that even if the corporation was subject to the tax, it was exempt under section 11B of the tax laws which hold that one who merely purchases for another and receives remuneration for the actual purchases was not amenable to the act. There also the corporation lost.

However, Justice Bailey ruled that the corporation was indeed engaged in interstate commerce and thus could not be made subject to the tax. That was disputed in yesterday's answer filed by Glenn Simmon, assistant corporation counsel.

Donovan Calls Parley.

The meeting today to consider tax plans was called by Auditor Daniel J. Donovan. Present will be the District tax advisory committee and experts of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation.

The parley, called by Auditor Daniel J. Donovan, will be the first in which definite suggestions for increasing municipal revenue will be discussed. It will not be the last, however, and no final conclusions are expected to be reached.

Dr. Chester Pond, tax authority, hired by the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, to make the study, declined yesterday to divulge what combination of taxes will be put before the 10-man committee of District officials and private citizens.

It is known, however, that Dr. Pond is looking into new sources of municipal revenue beyond the levies proposed to Congress last year.

Indications are that the program which will evolve from the study will cover several new tax proposals rather than a single new levy.

Meanwhile, the commissioners will begin studying the 1940 departmental estimates, the first of which will be released today by the auditor.

Henry A. Hesse Ends 45 Years In Civil Service Commission

Valiant Defender of the Merit System, Aged 70, Is Given Leather Chair by Fellow Workers; He Kept Misfits Out of Jobs.

Henry A. Hesse yesterday ended 45 consecutive years with the United States Civil Service Commission—in a soft, green leather chair on a shady porch at his home, 13 Wetherill road, Westmoreland Hills.

HENRY A. HESSE.

Civil Service President Harry B. Mitchell went there yesterday morning to felicitate Hesse on his retirement and also on his seventieth birthday and to present the green leather chair on behalf of Hesse's fellow workers. It was the occasion for some reminiscenses, and a few observations:

Hesse recalled entering the service on September 11, 1893. He had been out of Cornell about three years, and before coming to the commission had worked for a railroad in Pittsburgh. They took him on here as a stenographer. But he didn't stay in that grade

In 1913, he became chief of the examining division, and during the World War, when the country was pressed for men for its civil duties, he paved the way for the entry of thousands of wartime clerks in the civil service. In 1920, he became chief of the division of investigation and review, and, finally, the investigations division.

He has been given credit for keeping thousands of misfits out of the service. He doesn't like to talk of the individual cases that were run down and exposed, but everything from detective work to courage entered in it. That he has "protected the integrity of civil service examinations" was emphasized yesterday by Commissioner Mitchell.

Hesse was at the Commission when its offices were at Eighth and E Streets in a building once tenanted by a beer parlor. He has arranged examinations that were taken on beer tables, and in a room where professional performers had sung "Ach, du Lieber Augustin." He was in the Commission when Teddy Roosevelt was a Commissioner.

He is now the second oldest employee in point of official service in the Commission. He has one fixed idea about it all: The merit system will prevail in the end. Its greatest drawback now is the large number of excepted positions and "the persistent outside influence on appointment." Hesse leaves the service officially at the end of this month.

Maj. Werth, Son Hurt in Georgia Auto Smash-up

Maj. James R. Werth, Rural Electrification Administration engineer, and his son, McRae, 15, were injured yesterday in an automobile accident near Macon, Ga., it was learned here last night.

REA officials said they were informed by telephone that Maj. Werth, an attache of Administrator John M. Carmody's office, had suffered a fractured vertebra in the neck and a leg injury. Werth's son, they said, sustained a broken jaw and a broken arm. Neither was reported in serious condition.

P. U. C. Plans No Reduction In Gas Rates

Failure to Give Company Notice Blocks Action Now, Keech Says.

The Public Utilities Commission will make no move to slash the basic rate of return of the Washington Gas Light Co. from 6½ to 6 per cent, it was indicated yesterday as the commission studied data submitted at the hearing Wednesday.

The reduction in the rate of return under the sliding scale was proposed at the gas rate hearing by William McK. Clayton, of the Federation of Citizens Associations.

No Notice Given.

Richmond B. Keech, vice chairman of the commission, pointed out that the commission had given the gas company no advance notice of intention to revise the sliding scale and consequently could not take up the matter at this late date.

Moreover, he said the fact that the basic rate of return of both the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. and the Potomac Electric Power Co. is only 6 per cent has no bearing on the issue.

Return May Vary.

"The United States Supreme Court has held frequently that the rate of return of a public utility may vary according to the financial condition of the company," he explained.

The Public Utilities Commission yesterday entered the final stages of drafting a report on the valuation of the Capital Transit Co.

The valuation study, which has been under way for five years or more, will be completed within ten days and a valuation figure will be announced, it was said.

Gray Reunion Slated.

Richmond, Aug. 4 (AP).—The United Confederate Veterans will meet in forty-eighth annual reunion in Columbia, S. C., August 30, through September 2, Gen. William McK. Evans, commander of the Virginia Division, said today.

Harry Kelley Holds Browns as Nats Win, 10 to 4

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

941 Spectators.

St. Louis, Aug. 4.—This town, a baseball citadel since the '80's, is now tabbed as a cancerous growth in the big league system and the other major league clubs would be well rid of it, if they could.

POVICH.

Until two years ago, it was only the American League which suffered from the presence of St. Louis in the big leagues. The Browns, hopelessly mired in the futility of trying to make a respectable showing in the pennant races, represented a drain on the treasury of every club in the league, which rarely succeeded in making expenses on their trips here.

But during the past two seasons, the Cardinals have fallen into the same classification. The defection of the Gas House Gang, the sale of its stars, and its inability to stay up in the race have contrived to make St. Louis a dismal National League city as well.

Today, for example, the Browns' management announced that there were 941 paid admissions. That was done very blandly, because a hasty count from the press box revealed only approximately 800 customers including pass-bearers. It is an old habit of the management to puff the attendance, especially where there are two teams in a city.

Even on the basis of the 941 paid admissions announced the Washington Club lost money on the day. Averaging only 30 cents per paid admission, the Nats' treasury would receive only $300 as its share of the proceeds. That is insufficient to meet the hotel and traveling expenses of a contingent of 30 players, coaches and officials.

It is not the losses that the visiting clubs are forced to take that has embittered them on St. Louis, however. It is the fact that St. Louis, which formerly was recognized as an excellent baseball town, no longer spills any profits into the treasuries of the visiting clubs.

Sales Helped Them.

Newspapermen close to the Browns estimate that the club last year lost between $50,000 and $60,000 on the season. And that its losses were not greater is due only to the fact that it owned a successful San Antonio team in the Texas League which sluiced several thousands of dollars into the parent club's treasury.

The last season in which the Browns showed a profit was in 1935. But a profit for the Browns that season did not mean that conditions were better and that the visiting clubs shared in the upturn. The visiting clubs continued to take their annual losses in St. Louis.

The Browns profited to the extent of $30,000 in 1935 only because Manager Rogers Hornsby sold Buck Newsom to the Washington club for $40,000 and made various other sales that fetched $40,000 more to his club.

With the Browns continuing to operate at a loss which puts a heavy pressure on their treasury, there are no signs that the club will be able to develop or buy talent so necessary to make it a contender. It is a black picture.

The Cardinas are in much the same boat. Like the Browns, they profit from player sales and radio broadcasts and cash in on heavy attendance figures away from home, but in Sportsman's Park where they take down 70 per cent of the gate, they are not drawing.

Cards Aren't Rich.

Contrary to the general impression, the Cardinals are not a rich club. Branch Rickey overreached his hand, it is reported here, when he built up the expansive and expensive farm system for the Cardinals. Few of the farm teams show a profit and since 1934 when they won their last pennant, the Cardinals haven't been able to stand their losses.

It was the acute financial pinch more than anything else that caused the Cardinals to sell their biggest attraction, Dizzy Dean. This week, despite the fact that the Cardinals were suffering from infield trouble, they sold Joe Stripp, their regular third baseman, to the Bees for the waiver price of $7,500.

St. Louis observers blame Branch Rickey, Cardinal business manager, for the decline in baseball interest here. It was Rickey who, in his greed for big gates during the peak years of the Cardinals, instituted the synthetic double-headers—calling off week-day games to present double bills on Saturdays and Sundays.

What Rickey did in effect, they believe, is to make St. Louis into a strictly week-end baseball town. Week-day games, except when they present momentous possibilities are farcical as far as attendance is concerned in St. Louis. The customers, who have been inured to two games for the price of one, now wait for the double bills.

And with the Cardinals now a

Cubs Blank Giants, 6-0; French Wins

Allows Only Six Hits for Victory; Hartnett Hits Home Run.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 4.—Backing up Larry French's six-hit pitching with a five-run blast in the sixth inning, the Chicago Cubs blanked the New York Giants, 6 to 0, today.

It was the twelfth whitewash job painted on the Giants this season, and left them 5½ games behind the pace-setting Pittsburgh Pirates in the National League chase.

French pitched hitless ball the last four innings. Bill Lohrman, who went eight innings for the Giants, was charged with his first defeat of the year, after five victories.

Chisox Beat Macks Twice

Chicago, Aug. 4 (AP).—With Rip Radcliff and Gerald Walker pacing their 31-hit attack, Chicago's White Sox beat the Philadelphia Athletics in both games of a doubleheader today, 8 to 2 and 7 to 3.

Radcliff, who banged out four singles and a double in the first game and got three for five in the second, ran his two-day string to ten consecutive safeties before he was stopped in the nightcap.

Walker poked out two doubles and a single in the first game and two doubles and two singles in the second.

Lefty Thornton Lee limited the A's to six hits in the opener to score his fifth victory of the season. Jack Knott allowed 13 safeties in the second game, but kept them scattered.

The Washington Post Sports

18 WASHINGTON: FRIDAY, AUGUST 5, 1938 X*

Sammy carries the ball, too.

Three Articles a Week Will Tell of Events, Personalities, Problems in National Pro League; Sunday Story on 'How to Play Football' Is Feature.

Slingin' Sammy Baugh, the tall, lean Texan who flared brilliantly across the professional football firmament last season, led the Washington Redskins to their first league championship and set the sports writers delving into dictionaries for new adjectives to describe his pass-throwing prowess, will write exclusively for The Washington Post this season.

Beginning August 15, three times weekly and every Sunday, Baugh, the sharpshooter who can hit a dime at 50 yards with his deadly accurate pegs, will bring you behind-the-scene stories of the game that has captured the Nation's fancy, that lured thousands of Washington residents to the stadium last season.

Not ordinary stuff will Baugh write, but gripping, blood-tingling word descriptions of what actually transpires on the field in the heat of battle. He'll tell you what thoughts flash through his mind as he drifts back to fire a long pass to a teammate—a pass that may mean the difference between victory and defeat. He'll tell you of the team's triumphs and failures, pulling no punches.

He'll write about huddles, what happens when the team groups itself around the quarterback for the next signal, and how the quarterback selects plays. And he'll tell you how successful their strategy was, why it worked or why it backfired.

A "Different" Feature.

Baugh will bring a story to The Post's sports pages that only a man who actually participates in the sport can tell, the story of a professional football team under fire.

Sammy will relate how it feels to hear the crowd's plaudits ringing out through the crisp, autumn air, and just as honestly give his reaction to the hoots and jeers that at some time during his career every star must hear.

He'll tell you about coaches, their pet plays and clever strategy. He'll go into every team in the league, tear its roster wide apart and put every man under the microscope for you to see. He'll tell you who hits hardest in tackling, which man is the best defensive player, which is the hardest to bring down in a broken field. He'll describe the punters, the tricks they employ and how it feels to be under a punt with the foot-beats of two ponderous, alert ends thundering down upon you.

Some Real Stories.

Does the receiver get nervous under such circumstances? Sammy will tell you. He'll describe a man's feeling when he gets away for a long run—a touchdown-scoring run, and his feelings when he fumbles at a strategic point in the game. He'll give you his emotions when he connects with a long pass to a teammate, and when a pass is intercepted. He'll write of how it feels to get off a beautiful pass under almost impossible conditions only to have the receiver muff it; or how it feels to see a player clinging to the ball after an almost impossible catch.

Moreover, Baugh will bring you tidbits of gossip gleaned from idle hours with his teammates. One of them, perhaps, may eat ice cream for breakfast, another might be superstitious—as many are. Coaches may have the "injun" sign on certain teams, or certain plays. There may be intensive rivalry between certain players in the league, possibly bad blood. Breaks of the game, peculiar twists of fortune that may decide important games, give them added importance—and Sammy will be right on top of them to tell you about them.

Big Sunday Feature.

Sunday's feature story will be devoted exclusively to football for the youngsters. He'll tell them, and have pictures to demonstrate, how he grips the ball for a pass. He'll show them how to receive the ball from center for a run, or for a punt; how to hold it before kicking, how high to hold it; how to tuck it under the arm to prevent ball-snatching when running with it.

He'll give a graphic picture of the proper way to tackle, block and receive passes. He'll write about selecting plays, substituting players, and making your own breaks in a game. In short, he'll give the youngsters everything there is to know about football in all its phases.

Baugh, an All-American halfback at Texas Christian University where he starred three years, is rated the greatest passer in history, and that includes a lot of territory. Gus Dorais, Benny Friedman, Brick Mueller and George Gipp were hailed as supermen at passing, but when Baugh came along he outshone the entire group. If there is anything he can't do with a pigskin it has not yet been discovered.

In three years at Texas Christian, he completed 274 passes in 509 attempts for gains totaling 3,479 yards, and 39 touchdowns. That is an all-time record that promises to withstand the assault of countless future generations. His very name struck terror in the hearts of the enemy, for with one devasting peg from his arm Baugh could, and often did, change the entire complexion of the game, swinging the pendulum of victory toward his team.

Sensation of League.

Beginning his professional career last season with the Redskins, after a brilliant performance in the annual College All-Star-Professional Champions game at Chicago, Baugh skyrocketed to fame. He was the sensation of the league, and in every football-loving city in the Nation his name became a household byword. Every high school and sandlot player strove to imitate his graceful, ballet-like motions.

Like all outstanding athletes Baugh reputedly was at odds with the Redskins over salary matters as early as last year, but he repeatedly denied the rumors and finally dispelled them by signing a three-year contract earlier this week.

A natural sportsman, Sammy starred in baseball and basketball while in college, and last spring had a trial at shortstop with the St. Louis Cardinals. Later he was farmed out to the Rochester Redwings, of the International League. He intends to abandon his baseball career entirely in favor of football, he said while signing his contract, and is expected to turn in his uniform by the end of this week.

Makes Home Here.

Sammy is married. He has been a benedict since last April 10, when he married his college sweetheart, Edmonia Smith, at Sweetwater, Tex. He will bring his bride to Washington when he reports here for training, and the couple is expected to make their home in this city permanently.

Baugh has been offered several important posts, but declined them because of his love of playing the game. Early last spring he assisted Ray Wolf, University of North Carolina coach, during spring practice at Chapel Hill, but left to join the Cardinal baseball squad. He since has been offered several tempting propositions, but declined them.

Redskins Have Ducats For All-Star Game

Officials of the All Star-Redskins football game in Chicago, August 31, announced in Chicago yesterday that all seats had been sold out for the contest except those in the end zones.

Casey Wins Title Match Over Dusek

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Virtue and "Honest Ernie" Dusek dropped a much disputed and roundly hooted decision to Steve Casey, world's wrestling champion of the Bowser circuit, and Al Morelli, the referee, in a titanic struggle last night at the Stadium.

Excited whisperings of a "shooting match" rippled through the crowd in the earlier minutes of the contest as the principles went from one hold to another without the customary hippodroming and tinsel tactics.

The crowd of 2,000 fans assembled on the ball club campus sensed the bad blood between the two, Dusek representing the league presided over by big brother Rudy, and Casey struggling to keep the Bowser colors on top.

And at least half of them arose en masse and howled dismally as Morelli, an attache of the National Wrestling Association, imported for the express purpose of handling the match, disqualified Dusek after 35 minutes of serious tugging, punching and mauling.

Referee Almost Kayoed.

They cried for Morelli's blood, demanded that he be hanged from a convenient girder and that Dusek be awarded the decision. Morelli had good grounds for disqualifying Ernie—a painful punch on the schnozzle that knocked him to the mat. He hit the deck twice again after Ernie had been disqualified and almost passed out.

But Ernie, too, had good grounds for heaving his right hook in the first place. The incident leading directly up to his disqualification was a leg-lock he clamped on the Irishman which Morelli claimed was a strangle-hold. He ordered Dusek to break, and the wrestler refused. The arbiter then pulled him off the prostrate, profusely perspiring form of Casey and Dusek leaped to his feet and felled Morelli with one generous swipe of his fat paw.

Morelli Up and Down.

Morelli landed on his tummy and bounced a half-dozen times, but struggled to his feet and raised Casey's arm in token of victory. That was akin to waving a red flag in a bull's face, for Ernie hauled off and socked him again. His quivering frame bounced only a couple of times before he regained his feet. A third time Dusek slugged him before Morelli decided that discretion was the better part of valor and remained prone on the canvas.

Casey, meanwhile, was cowering in a neutral corner and Dusek went after him. The husky Irishman with ham-like hands raised them as if to deliver a hammer blow on the neck and Dusek kept his distance. Casey poked Ernie a couple of times with his elbow before the gendarmes (two of 'em) swarmed into the ring and flashed a red light on the proceedings.

In the dressing room it was discovered that Casey's knee was out of oint and that two ribs, No. 9 and 10 on the left side, had snapped beneath the sledge-hammer blows Dusek delivered ealy in the brawl. Casey plainly had all the worst of it, although he ripped a mean gash on the inside of Dusek's mouth with punches that were not strictly cricket. He used his clenched fist a couple of times, rather than the open palm or forearm.

Flat On His Back.

The Irishman almost lost the match — and undoubtedly would have but for Morelli's timely interference, when Dusek had him flat on his back for at least a five-count. Morelli leisurely ambled over to the pair, casually probed under Steve's back to determine if he was down, and by the time he made the startling discovery that he was down, Casey had managed to extricate a shoulder from the melee, saving his title.

Both punched freely throughout the engagement, and clamped legsplits on one another, but every time Dusek obtained a punishing hold on the Irishman, Morelli forced him to break. He employed the Japanese neck-lock used so successfully by Jim Londos, only to have Morelli call it a strangle hold. It was very discouraging for an honest working man.

In the preliminaries Jack League and Paul Boesch went 45 minutes to a draw; Emil Dusek pinned George Kondylis in 20½ minutes with a body press; Ed Make threw Ed Newman in 9:45, and Bibber McCoy disposed of Walter Podolak in 13½ minutes.

Equipoise Dies On Whitney Farm

Lexington, Ky., Aug. 4 (AP).—Equipoise, second to Sun Beau as the world's leading money-winning race horse, died tonight at the C. V. Whitney Farm near here.

In his six years of racing, the chestnut son of Pennant-Swinging won $338,610 and held the world's record of 1:34 2-5 for the mile, set in 1932 at Arlington Park.

"Ekky's" death was unexpected. He became ill Wednesday. An autopsy will be performed tomorrow.

Zeke Bonura Hits Homer With 2 On

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

St. Louis, Aug. 4.—In the sweltering heat of St. Louis' hottest day of the year, the Nats broke out with a rash of base hits and a clever pitching performance by fat Harry Kelley and licked the Browns, 10 to 4.

His well-dampened uniform exuding steam as he toiled in a temperature of 100, the rotund Kelley collaborated with his corpulent colleague, Zeke Bonura, to make the contest a soft touch for the Nats.

While Kelley was attending very adequately to the pitching, Bonura was attending to the hitting. The Browns never did get Bonura out. He was viciously assaulting the hurling of two St. Louis pitchers all afternoon and swatted out a single, a pair of two-baggers against different fences and his ninth home run of the year.

Brings 7 Runs.

All told, big Zeke figured in seven of the Nats ten runs. Four of 'em he drove across the plate himself, and three times he crossed the plate personally. He reached his peak for the day in the seventh inning when with Bluege and Simmons resting on base and wondering where the next hit was coming from, Bonura showed 'em a terrific blast that climbed half way to the top of the left center stands for a homer.

Zeke was quite a brunt-bearer today. The victim of most of his socks was the spare-ribbed Howard Mills, elongated left-hander who gave up 12 of the Nats' 14 hits in the eight innings he pitched.

It was a breeze for Kelley. For seven innings, he held the Browns scoreless, only one man reaching third base. He had a 10-1 lead going into the ninth inning when the Browns came up with three unearned runs which were encouraged by Kelley's own error and an equally dismal muff by Cecil Travis.

Bluege No Drawback.

Ossie Bluege was no drawback to the Nats today, either. The 37-year-old fellow who found his way into the lineup at third base when young Buddy Lewis complained of the heat and missed his first game of the season, contributed a double and a single to the Nats' attack.

And in the third inning, Bluege contributed one of his copyrighted fielding plays that cut off a run, perhaps more. That was when he speared Buster Mills' hot smash far to his left with one hand and with equal nonchalance tossed Mills out at first base as if to the manner born.

They made it 5-0 in the third inning. That was when Bluege drew a walk and four straight hitters pounded out safeties. Bonura lashed a double against the right center wall, Travis singled to left, West singled to right and Myer singled to left.

It was 6-0 at the end of the fifth. The Nats got that run very cheaply. Al Simmons couldn't get his bat out of the way of an inside pitch and beat out an accidental hit down the first-base line. Zeke Bonura got the benefit of a queer decision by Umpire Quinn at first base and was credited with an infield hit and eventually West's fly drove Simmons across.

Bonura upped it to 9-0 personally in the seventh. That was when he clouted that home run of his after Bluege and Simmons had singled. In the ninth the Nats kept their record for scoring in every other inning intact. Against Ed Cole, Bonura doubled and so did Myer and they had their last run.

Those three runs the Browns scored in the ninth served only to waste everybody's time, including their own.

Ft. Stevens Wins.

The Fort Stevens team moved a step nearer to the championship of the American Legion Junior Baseball League today by defeating Sergt. Jasper Post 9-5, in the first game of the 2 out of 3 games playoff series.

Balestri, of Washington, Wins Printers Golf

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 4.—Joe Balestri, of Washington, D. C., today successfully defended his Allied Trades Golf Championship with a 72-hole total of 316, as the four-day tournament came to a finish at the Edgewood Club. He wobbled to an 81 score, but maintained his lead since the start of the tournament and finished 11 strokes in front of George Stradtmiller, of Johnstown, Pa., who carded a 72-hole score of 327.

Eddie Rack, of McKeesport, turned in a final-round score of 75 to finish with a 72-hole total of 311 and win the Union Printers' International Golf Association Championship.

Rack, a former McKeesport High School athlete, won by three strokes over C. E. Schell, of Reading, Pa., who had a brilliant subpar 34 on his outgoing nine today, but failed to maintain the sensational pace.

When the final round started, Schell was 8 strokes behind the new champion, but his 34 while Rack was turning in 40 enabled him to make the turn only 2 strokes behind.

Rack steadied on the last nine and held his margin. Schell's chance faded on the eighteenth, when he was trapped, exploded out badly and chipped short. Rack with victory within his grasp, played safely for a 5.

Schell's spectacular finish gave him a 74 on the final round and a grand total of 314. C. R. Peters, of Grand Rapids, Mich., finished in third place with a total of 318, after a final-round score of 77.

Edgar Merkle, of Washington, D. C., who won the title in 1936 at Chicago, posted an 84 for a 72-hole total of 330, and Eddie Gableman, of Cincinnati, three times champion, had an 88 today for a total of 333.

Chicagoan Will Try 144-Hole Golf Marathon

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Aug. 4. — J. Smith Ferebee is going to try to get in some golf between dawn and dark tomorrow—144 holes of it—and has wagered $2,500 and 1,200 acres of Virginia plantation he can complete the marathon at an average of 95 strokes, or under, for the eight rounds.

A husky young Chicago investment broker, Ferebee will gamble on his stamina over the four heavily wooded courses at Olympia Fields, scene of the recent Chicago open tournament.

"About a month ago I played 90 holes one day," he chuckled, "and I'm confident I can do 144 holes. A friend, Fred Tuerk, bet his half share of the 2,400-acre plantation we own jointly in Princess Anne County, near Norfolk, Va., against my half share, that I couldn't do it. Other friends put up $2,500 additional."

The 31-year-old businessman, who said his game averaged between 83 and 85 strokes for 18 holes, intends to start out at 5 a. m., and "eat on the fly." He isn't contemplating rest periods between rounds. The Olympia Fields professional, Chuck Tannis, gives him a good chance to win the wager, declaring "the fellow will do it if it depends on physical condition."

A member at Olympia Fields, one of the largest golfing plants in the world, Ferebee will battle one of the hardest courses in this area. The eight rounds measure 51,568 yards—more than 29 miles—and even if he hits the ball straight all day he's in for quite a hike. Every course has plenty of trouble, as numerous top flight professionals will testify.

MacFayden Holds Bucs Well at Bay

Takes Fourth Straight, 4-3; Works Good in Pinches.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Aug. 4.—Bespectacled Danny MacFayden hurled the Boston Bees to a 4-to-3 win over Pittsburgh's league-leading Pirates today, giving him his fourth straight, the season and his fourth straight. He allowed 12 hits, but held the Pirates in check in the pinches.

Pittsburgh drew first blood in the third when Lee Handley, who got three for five, scored on Paul Waner's long fly. The Bees went ahead in the fifth as Vince DiMaggio's sixth home run of the season scored Al Lopez and Rabbit Warstler.

In the fifth, Floyd Young doubled and Handley scored him with his second single of the game. Bill Swift pulled the Pirates abreast in the sixth with a blow past Joe Stripp, which scored Arky Vaughan.

At the beginning of the eighth, however, Mace Brown replaced Swift on the mound and the Bees landed on him quickly. Johnny Cooney and Debs Garms singled and Brown walked Elbie Fletcher. Stripp banged out a long fly to Johnny Rizzo and Cooney scored the winning run on the throw in.

Brown was charged with the loss, which gave the Bees an even break in the four-game series.

Greenville, S. C., Aug. 3 (AP).—The Macon Peaches extended their winning streak to five games tonight by defeating the Spinners for the fourth time in a row. Timely hitting and Greenville's slow fielding enabled the visitors to win, 11 to 6.

Almada Guards His Hitting Streak

St. Louis, Aug. 4.—Threatened with the loss of his long hitting streak, Melo Almada kept it intact in the eighth inning today when he hit safely in his twentieth consecutive game.

Hitless until that point, Almada beat out a perfect bunt down the third base line.

The Browns' outfielder, whom they acquired from the Nats in June, is now the club's leading hitter with his .317 average, which represents a gain of 80 points since he was traded.

St. Louis, Aug. 4.—The Nats tonight entrained for Chicago and a three-game series with the White Sox. It will be their last stop in the West before they move to New York for a series with the Yanks.

Redskins Are Arriving for Football Practice

The vanguard of Redskin gridmen trooped into club headquarters yesterday looking ready for action. They'll find it next Wednesday when Coach Ray Flaherty blows the whistle for the first practice session of the season at Ballston, Va.

Morris Elder, former Kansas fullback; Clem Stralka, a guard who played under Jack Hagerty at Georgetown; Milton Johnson, former New Hampshire tackle, and Irvin Gilbreath, from the University of Texas, are the newcomers. They join Charley Malone, Riley Smith and Jay Turner, who already are on the premises.

Elder led the Big Six Conference in scoring during his senior year, and was chosen over big Sam Francis on the All-Conference eleven. He is a husky individual, a line-cracker of the first water, and will fit in well with Flaherty's scheme of things if a year's lay-off has not hurt too much. He graduated last June, but played no football in the autumn.

Stralka is one of the finest guards ever developed at the Hilltop and has an extraordinary good chance of making the club. He packs a lot of beef on a squatty frame and is a great competitive player.

Gilbreath, a graduate of last June who also forewent the gridiron last season to study law and help coach at Texas, was recommended to George Marshall by Sammy Baugh, who played against him often enough to discover his fine qualities. Baugh confidently expects Gilbreath to be his running mate in the regular backfield.

Johnson, a strapping youngster who starred for New Hampshire last year, is visiting a sister in Washington, and will report ready for the grind next week.

General Manager Jack Espey last night announced that arrangements have been made with the bus company transporting Wee Willie Wilkin across the country to have regular bulletins on his progress flashed to Washington. Wilkin has a penchant for disappearing in broad daylight and remaining hidden for weeks at a time. The bus company has instructed its agents to wire the Washington office every time the bus stops, and the first time Willie is reported missing a posse will be sent out for him.

Two Oriole Players Released by Ogden

Baltimore, Aug. 4 (AP).—The parade of players from Oriole Park continued today with General Manager Jack Ogden announcing Infielder Justin Stein had been released and returned to the Cincinnati Reds and Outfielder Ray Stoviak to the Philadelphia National team.

With Bill Ackerman.

The fact that no deadline for the purchase of tickets was set for the Fishing Special, leaving Union Station tomorrow night over the Pennsylvania, is very likely the reason that more reservations have not been made in advance.

ACKERMAN

If you intend to go, by all means get your ticket today, for these trips mean more than adding an extra car or two to a train for a last-minute overload. There are boats at Atlantic City to be chartered, buses to cover the jump, and a myriad of small details depending solely upon the size of the party.

Fishing at Atlantic City has picked up considerably in the past few days, after a slack period due to the prolonged bad weather. Some bluefish are being caught, in addition to the usual kings, croakers, seabass and sea trout.

With the temporary slack period in bay fishing, due to the hot weather, this Fishing Special seems like a good chance to spend a productive day offshore.

If you are going to take the bay regardless, some point close to one of the rock schools is advisable. Rock Hall, on the Chester River, reached by way of the Matapeake Ferry from Annapolis. Bloody Point and Eastern Bay, fished by boats out of Annapolis, Shadyside and Herring Bay. Point No Point and Cedar Point, on boats from Solomons and Ridge, while the schools in the neighborhood of Tall Timbers and Ragged Point, in the Potomac, are fished by boats from Smiths Creek, Piney Point, and as far up the river as River Springs.

The upper Potomac continues to look more like coffee than water, from the squalls that have been breaking daily all over the watershed, so if the nice strings of cats, weighing up to five and six pounds, being caught at Joe Fletcher's are not inducement enough to fish the Potomac, we will take you farther afield, to a stream that is never muddy, and although known as one of the finest bass waters in the Blue Ridge, is fished hardly at all.

The one thing required by this change in scenery is another license, for Yellow Springs in West Virginia, an even hundred miles from Washington, but over roads that reduce the time element to little more than two hours—by way of Winchester to Gore, where a mile out turn left at Pop's Place, and eleven more miles to Yellow Springs and Kleinheim, the hostelry of Mrs. Lottie Klein; within 50 yards of the beautiful Cacapon River, and as much of an attraction as the bass fishing, for the comfortable surroundings, and the most excellent meals are just what it takes to complete a perfect day.

The river at this point is but 150 feet across, and crystal clear; wadeable, or the deep pools can be fished from one of the boats, that are included in the modest rate of $1.75.

Fighting smallmouth black bass, that have no need to hunt deep holes during mid-day hours, for here the waters are always cool and the fish at their best. Creel limits are no trick at all.

United States Power Squadron members are holding a squadron rendezvous today and tomorrow at the St. Michaels Regatta, on the Miles River, on the Eastern Shore. Rather an initial get-together of squadrons from Washington, Wilmington, Hampton Roads and Baltimore in an effort to start the ball rolling for more intersquadron affairs.

There is little doubt the cruise will be an interesting trip, for the Miles and the Choptank are one of the most beautiful cruising grounds to be found anywhere.

A card from Harold Vermeule, up to his usual trick of fishing the Gulf Stream during the summer months, when he gets a brand of sport seldom encountered during the cold months. He says there are more than enough dolphin, bonito and barracuda. Mrs. Vermeule hooked a large sail, but it was lost when the line broke.

C. G. Ross, of Clarendon; W. H. Tinsman and P. H. Underwood, fishing at Ocean City Monday with Capt. Hall on his Cutty Sark landed two fine marlin.

Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Catti, fishing with Capt. Lev Raymond on the Lev-Lou the same day, got one, while Mr. Edward W. Colladay, back for another whack at the big fish, caught one from the same boat on Tuesday. On his initial trip some ten days ago, he also boated one, as did his son, David Colladay.

At the same time Bob Edge, the well-known news and fishing commentator on WOR, with J. (Ham) Brown, fishing scribe of the Baltimore American, were satisfied to fish the inlet, where the hardheads were really going to town.

Smokers' Test showed Vintage Tobacco was easier on your breath

WHITE OWLS are definitely easier on your breath—scientific tests proved it. There's a good reason why. Every White Owl always has a Vintage-tobacco filler. Nature made this tobacco exceptionally mild. We maintain a vast crop-inspection system—the only known organization of its kind—to locate Vintage tobacco. Even in Vintage years, we classify all filler tobaccos into at least seven grades—and use only tobacco of the quality of the top three grades for the filler of our White Owl cigars.

The Metallic Nose Knows

Scientists use a sensitive osmoscope to measure odor . . . to record its intensity and lasting power. Ten popular brands of 5¢ cigars were tested by this machine. White Owl was easier on the breath than all the others. After 30 minutes, all trace of tobacco odor disappeared from the breath of White Owl smokers.

Yankees Stage Six-Run Rally in Fifth Inning to Defeat Tigers, 8-4

20th Homer Of Year Hit By DiMaggio

Monte Pearson Allows but Nine Hits as Mates Slug.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, Aug. 4.—The New York Yankees landed on Vernon Kennedy with a six-run blast in the fifth inning today and coasted in with an 8-to-4 victory over the Tigers behind Monte Pearson's nine-hit pitching.

The victory boosted the Yanks' American League leading margin to 2½ games over the idle Cleveland Indians, whom they meet in a three-game series beginning tomorrow.

Pearson got away to a shaky start, but after giving four runs and five hits in two frames, he pitched shutout ball the rest of the way, chalking up his ninth victory of the season and his sixth in a row.

Kennedy, who was charged with his fourth straight setback, appeared to have a comfortable working margin. Chep Morgan's single scored two runs in the first inning and Billy Rogell's two-bagger brought another pair across in the second.

But the Yanks batted around in their big fifth, during which George Selkirk, for the third time in his career, equalled the major league record of drawing two bases on balls in one inning. Consecutive doubles by Joe Gordon and Pearson, four walks altogether and singles by Frankie Crosetti and Joe Glenn made up the frame. Glenn caught for the Yanks when Bill Dickey was forced to retire because his right leg bothered him in the second.

Joe DiMaggio's 20th homer of the year in the seventh, and a run in the eighth on hits by Gordon and Crosetti and Red Rolfe's fly wound up the scoring.

British Will Recognize Jurich Vs. Kane Winner

London, Aug. 4 (AP).—The British Board of Boxing Control announced today it would recognize as world flyweight champion the winner of a September match between Jackie Jurich, of San Jose, Calif., and Peter Kane, of England. The 112-pounders will meet in Liverpool, but the exact date has not yet been set.

The board recently declared the title vacant when Henry Lynch, of Scotland, failed to make the class limit in a bout with Jurich.

Girls Stage Swim Event

Novelty Races Staged in Tank Meet.

The second in the city series of girls playground swimming meets was held yesterday at Georgetown Playground, with an unusually large number of entrants and an enthusiastic crowd in attendance. The novelty races, the fan race, balloon race and the night-shirt race, added considerable gaiety to the high-spirited crowd.

In the orthodox swimming competitions, which attracted a fine group of contestants, Jackie McKensig dominated the 10-12-year class with two victories, one in the free style and the other in the fan race.

Mildred Pollen won two "firsts" in the 13-14-year group with a victory in the side stroke and the novel feet-tied competition. The 17 years and over class found pretty Dorothy Keady holding the edge with triumphs in the free style and feet-tied events, also.

Today's sectional meet will be held at Takoma pool at 2 o'clock.

Bobby Riggs Goes to Semi-Final Round

Bryan Grant Is Defeated In Big Upset

Form Reversals Feature Day's Competition at Southampton.

By the United Press.

Southampton, N. Y., Aug. 4.—Form took a holiday today as quarter-final singles matches were completed in the men's invitation tournament at the Meadow Club here and the women's invitation tourney at the Maidstone Club in nearby East Hampton.

Only one of the four men's matches — in which top-seeded Bobby Riggs of Chicago won his way into the semifinals—and two of the women's matches ended as expected.

Riggs, second ranking player in the Nation, scored more or less easily over seventh seeded Hal Surface, Kansas City, Mo., 6—2, 7—5. The first surprise came when Frank Kovacs, Oakland, Calif., seeded fifth, routed big, blond Joe Hunt, Los Angles, 6—4, 7—5. Hunt was seeded third.

Then the No. 2 player, Bryan M. Grant, jr., Atlanta, went out before the sure-stroking of Sidney B. Wood, jr., New York, who was rated eighth. The score was 7—5, 8—6. Don McNeill, unseeded Oklahoma City ace, completed the day's upsets in the men's division when he knocked out Charley Hare, Englan's No. 2 player, 6—3, 6—4.

Semifinal Matches.

The doubles play saw the top-seeded duo, Wood and Joe Hunt, pace the field into the semifinals. Wood and Hunt triumphed over Surface and McNeill, 6—3, 6—4. Other teams to reach the round of four included Kovacs and Bobby Harman, of Oakland; Russell Bobbitt of Atlanta, and Frank Guernsey, jr., of Oakland, Fla., and Ernie Sutter, New Orleans, and Gil Hunt, Washington, D. C.

Sumner and Hunt put out the third-seeded team, Riggs and Grant, 7—5, 8—6. Bobbitt and Guernsey took the measure of a Miami combine, Gardner Mulloy and George Toley, 3—6, 7—5, 8—6; Kovacs and Harman eliminated Martin Buxby, Miami, and Charles Harris, West Palm Beach, 6—4, 6—3. Wood and Hunt are the only ranked team left in the running.

At Easthampton, the Nos. 1 and 2 players suffered elimination in the Maidstone Club's tournament.

Dot Bundy Beaten.

Top-seeded Dorothy Bundy, Santa Monica, Calif., third-ranking player in the entire Nation, lost to Dorothy Workman, Los Angeles, 4—6, 8—6, 6—2.

Mrs. Susan Palfrey Fabyan, Cambridge, Mass., second seeded in the draw, was defeated by another California lass, Barbara Winslow, Hollywood, 6—3, 3—6, 7—5. Mrs. Fabyan is ranked No. 6 nationally; Miss Winslow, No. 11.

The other two semifinalists were Helen Pedersen, Stamford, Conn., seeded fourth, and Virginia Wolfenden, San Francisco. Of the four semifinalists only Miss Wolfenden triumphed in straight sets. She turned back Mrs. Virginia Rice Johnson, Boston, with the loss of only two games, 6—0, 6—2. Miss Pedersen turned back Katie Winthrop, Manchester Mass., 10—12, 6—2, 6—4.

The singles semifinals tomorrow will send Miss Workman vs. Miss Pedersen and Miss Winslow vs. Miss Wolfenden.

Streptococcus Hits Umpire Ormsby

Chicago, Aug. 4 (AP).—The illness which has confined Emmett (Red) Ormsby, American League umpire, to a hospital since last Monday was diagnosed today by physicians as a streptococcic infection.

Dr. Richard J. Bennett, jr., said Ormsby's condition was not serious but that he was "still a sick man" and would remain in the hospital for some time. Recurring periods of high fever had puzzled doctors until a consultation today.

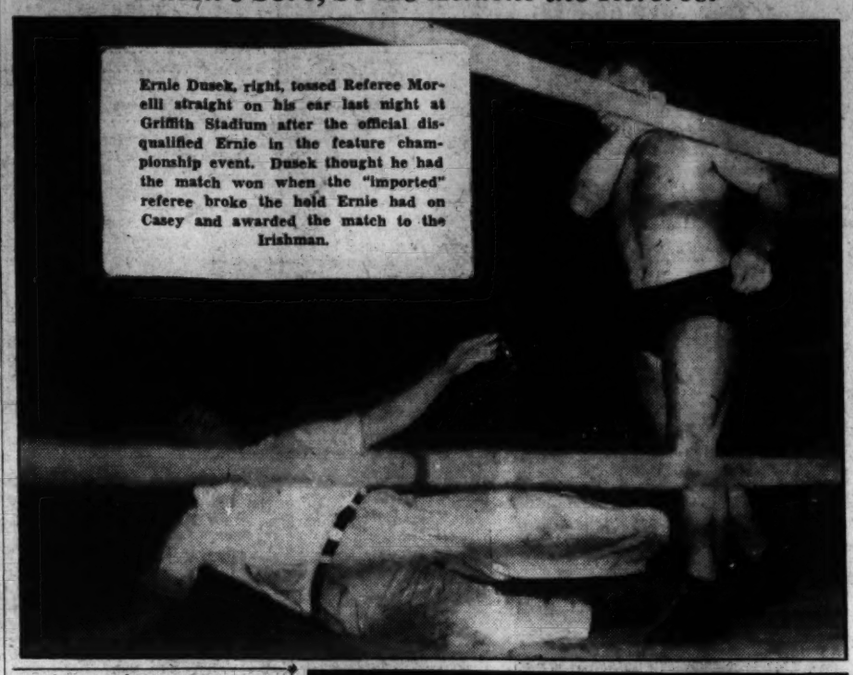
Dusek's Sore, So He Attacks the Referee!



Ernie Dusek, right, tossed Referee Morelli straight on his ear last night at Griffith Stadium after the official disqualified Ernie in the feature championship event. Dusek thought he had the match won when the "imported" referee broke the hold Ernie had on Casey and awarded the match to the Irishman.

Selkirk Breaks Mark, Is Walked Twice

Detroit, Aug. 4 (AP).—For the third time in his big league career, George Selkirk, New York Yankees' outfielder, today equaled the Major League record of getting two bases of balls in one innings.

Selkirk drew one pass from Vernon Kennedy and another from Jake Wade in the fifth frame of the game with the Tigers today as the Yanks batted around and scored six runs.

Selkirk walked twice in one inning on June 24, 1936, and again on August 28 of the same season.

Soldierette Spa Victor

Hirsch Horse Triumphs at Saratoga.

New York, Aug. 4.—Scoring her fourth and most important triumph in five starts, Soldierette, an ebony-hued daughter of Cohort owned and trained by W. J. (Buddy) Hirsch, today outran a dozen other 2-year-old fillies in the twenty-first Schuylerville Stakes at Saratoga.

With Lucas Dupps nursing her along with a wide lead, the 10-to-1 shot stepped the 5½ furlongs to register by four lengths. The victory was worth $4,600 and boosted Soldierette's earnings to $6,800.

C. S. Howard's Grey Nurse, a 40-to-1 chance, got on the outside to nose out Dinner Date, a 13-to-5 favorite from Mrs. Ethel V. Mars' Milky Way stable.

Herman Phillips' lightly campaigned plater, Smakov, defeated seven other claimers in the mile and sixteenth feature at Narragansett Park for his second victory in five starts this year. He was second in two other races.

Ruperto Donoso brought the 5-year-old son of Blue Pete home a neck in front of Mrs. W. Hodson's Glen Broom to pay $8.40 for $2. W. G. Wilson's Bit of Sorrow, an E. R. Bradley's Castoff, was third, another half-length back.

Frank Seremba's Fairflax, and the Valdina Farm's Lassator won the divided Tinley Park purse which served as the double feature at Washington Park.

Fairflax, favored in the fifth race, took command at the quarter pole and was never menaced. The Seremba horse ran the 6 furlongs in 1:12 2-5 and paid $7 straight in beating Jaycee and Shining heels.

Swedish Girl Sets Distance Swim Mark

Copenhagen, Aug. 4 (U.P.).—Sally Bauer, of Sweden, tonight completed a 37½-mile swim of the Cattegat arm of the North Sea from the northwest extremity of Zealand Island to Grenan on the west coast of the mainland. It took the young Swedish girl 17½ hours, nearly 12 hours faster than the 29 hour and 10 minuite mark established when the Cattegat was first conquered by Janny Kammersgaarb last year.

4 Jockeys Suspended After 'Beer Party'

Special Dispatch to The Post

Fair Grounds, Bel Air, Md., Aug. 4.—Yesterday's hot weather was too much for Jockeys Bill Smith, Ed Scott, Buddy Root and Sammy Palumbo and they indulged in a few glasses of beer. The result was their suspension today by Stewards William Harron, James T. Wolfe and Marion Staylor of the Harford County Fair Association, wh also referred their case to the Maryland Racing Commission.

Palumbo didn't ride yesterday, but visited the track and with his riding mates imbibed a bit too freely. If the boys aren't allowed to ride during the Cumberland meeting, which opens next Tuesday, it will take a lot of punch out of the Cumberland Fair Association's ten-day session.

Ball Paces Va. Tune-up

Farmington Pro Great in Rehearsal.

By the Associated Press.

Newport News, Va., Aug. 4.—Errie Ball, Farmington Club pro, and Chandler Harper, Portsmouth pro, set the tune-up race here today for the fifteenth annual Virginia State open golf championship, which begins Saturday at the Old Dominion Public Links Club, posting 71s.

Ball, unimpressive in practice on Wednesday, found the range here today and spun around the par 70 battleground with little difficulty. Harper, a native of the flat country, and familiar with the tournament course, was not extended in his one afternoon round to bag his 71.

The card of these two pros was better by a shot or two than any of the rest who posted practice scores.

Hugh McLellen, long hitting host professional, could do no better than 75, while Al Houghton, neighboring pro, from the Chamberlain Country Club, finished in 74.

Ralph Lang, another siege-gun hitter, from the Martinsville Country Club, had a 74. Johnny Goodwin, Bassett Country Club pro, playing with Lang, finished in 76.

Players or Lights That's the Question!

St. Louis, Aug. 4 (AP).—Donald L. Barnes, president of the last-place St. Louis Browns, admitted frankly today that he was in a quandary about night baseball at Sportsman's Park.

"It's a question," he said, "whether we want to buy baseball players or floodlights. Perhaps we would do better to get a baseball team first and the lights afterwards.

"For $50,000, the Browns' share of the installation cost, we ought to be able to buy a couple of really helpful players who would lift the club out of the rut. That's our main objective."

Man of the Month

By Arch McDonald.
(WJSV-Wheaties Baseball Commentator.)

(Each day, Arch McDonald distributes 10 points among the Nats whose play was most helpful to the Washington Club. At the end of each month The Washington Post will award to the leading player a gift in token of the honor of being The Post-Wheaties "Man of the Month.")

Harry Kelley and Zeke Bonura draw down equal parts of the latest award of points in the Man of the Month contest on the basis of their play in yesterday's victory over the Browns.

To Kelley, four points, because he shut the Browns out for seven innings while the Nats collected a 7-0 lead, and because only one of the four runs scored by the Browns was earned.

To Bonura, four points, because he figured in eight of the Nat's 10 runs, with his single, his pair of doubles and his homer, which came with two on base.

To Buddy Myer, two points, because he made three of the Nats' hits, including a two-bagger, and played a spectacular game in the field.

Harry Kelley	4	Ken Chase	2

Down In Front

By Richards Vidmer.

Hail MacPhail.

I can't remember whether I ever have expressed my opinion of night baseball publicly, but I must confess that I never have held it in very high esteem. I pooh - poohed the idea at least to myself, thought of it as a showboat stunt that was a black mark on what we call our great national pastime, and inwardly condemned the whole thing as a fad.

VIDMER.

And for these things I apologize. My attitude was unfair in the extreme. I had no right to scoff at night baseball, even if I refrained from doing so audibly, because I never had seen a night game. Now I have and can express a more intelligent opinion.

And so to Leland Stanford McPhail, general manager of the Brooklyn Baseball Club, I offer my sincere apologies. He is the father of the idea, at least so far as the major leagues are concerned. He installed the practice of having evening performances at Cincinnati, although there was strenuous opposition. Then he brought the night life to Brooklyn in spite of the quaint quips of criticism that were flung in his direction.

But night baseball in the major leagues is destined to spread. At least two more teams will be playing some of their home games under lights next season. In a few years it is likely that there will be night games all over the circuit, and it wouldn't be in the least surprising if the time would come eventually when all weekday games will be played in the evening by the moonlight, with matinees on Saturday, Sundays and holidays only.

If the Cardinals and the Dodgers, a couple of second division clubs going nowhere and with only a few more weeks of the season in which to get there, had played on Wednesday afternoon, there would have been only a few thousand fans sitting in to witness the contest. But they played on Wednesday night instead, and there were over 36,000 spectators in Ebbets Field with 10,000 more turned away at the gates because there was no more room.

Work and Pleasure.

The answer is quite simple. The fans simply would rather go to games at night than in the afternoon. For one thing it is more practical. Baseball fans, generally speaking, are working men who can't get away from their jobs until 5 o'clock or later, and by then the ball game is practically over. So they must wait until Saturday or Sunday to see their favorite team in action.

But with night baseball, they come home to dinner at the regular time and still can see a ball game instead of the film at the neighborhood theater, which probably is showing something they don't want to see especially anyway. In other words it is possible for a fan to do his job and see his baseball too, with no extra charge and no inconvenience to anyone.

It is a little strange at first, but after watching two or three innings the fan forgets about the dark background beyond the fences, the hour of the evening, and the game seems quite natural. The players are prone to find fault, of course, using the lights as alibis for their failure to hit, wildness in the box and bobbles in the field. But they know inwardly that they might have been just a futile at bat, just as wild in the box or committed just as glaring an error if the game had been played in the afternoon. And when the time comes when the majority of games are played under lights and afternoon performances are the exception, they probably will feel that they can't be expected to do as well with the sun shining and shadows on the field.

Health and Business.

Night baseball has several advantages which do not appear on the surface. For one thing it is almost sure to reduce the mortality rate of grandmothers. There also is likely to be a decrease of illness at home. Businessmen who step out for lunch will return to their offices more frequently. And when salesmen come in at the end of the day and say they have been to see eighteen men, they will mean eighteen prospective clients.

I also must apologize to Mr. McPhail for having felt a certain antipathy toward his practice of putting on sideshows at Ebbets Field. I still think that a more solid foundation can be built for any ball club by concentrating on producing a winning team than by attracting the customers for the trimmings, such as foot races, band concerts, fire works, slugging contests and a glimpse of Babe Ruth.

But I have changed my mind about those things, too. They don't detract from the baseball game itself, and they are in the interest of the evening's entertainment. When the actual game starts, those things are forgotten, but they have served to amuse and interest the fans during the hour between a demi tasse and darkness.

And certainly it is more pleasant to sit in the cool of the evening and watch a ball game than it is to swelter in the heat of the afternoon. It is even more pleasant than being confined indoors watching a picture show, playing bridge, drinking beer or whatever it is that people do on hot summer nights.

It seems to me that McPhail has done a really noble thing in introducing night baseball into the major leagues. It seems to me that he has taken the crititism, the objections, the laughs directed at him bravely and steadfastly, he knew in his own mind that he was right, and he went ahead, letting the quips fall where they may. And it is possible that the day will come when they will be singing his praises as the father of night baseball.

Spider Traps and Devours Goldfish

A spider hanging from a leaf caught a three-inch goldfish—and here's proof of the rare sight Mrs. H. W. Bryan saw when she chanced to pass her lily pond at her St. Petersburg, Fla., home. When the picture was made, the fish still was alive, but the spider finally devoured it.

Death, Her Old Stooge, Steals Act at Last From Pearl White

Age, Given by Star as 49, Was Really 41, Father Says; Daredevil 'Wanted to Keep Ahead of Mary Pickford.'

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Aug. 4.—Death, which never quite caught up with Pearl White in serial movie thrillers of 20 years ago, came to her today in the American Hospital.

She died of a liver ailment for which she had been under hospital care since early last month. Friends said a private funeral probably would be held Saturday, with burial in a Paris cemetery.

Miss White had given her age as 49. Edward C. White, of Springfield, Mo., Miss White's 84-year-old father, said she was 41 years old, not 49, explaining that his daughter had added a few years "to keep ahead of Mary Pickford."

Long before the American movie had found its voice, the blonde, blue-eyed Pearl White had risen from circus bareback rider to typify the ultimate in cinematic thrills—thrills without benefit of a double.

Perhaps the greatest of her many serials was "The Perils of Pauline," packed with hairbreadth escapes from death or a fate even worse, and at the height of her peril—"Continued next week." Next week would bring delivery of the heroine and another danger-fraught crisis.

When she entered the hospital in early July her friends said she had planned to attempt a comeback in the movies, which she had quit in 1924. She had taken a test for the talkies in 1929 but had told acquaintances that her voice was not suited to the new films. She lived in France for 14 years.

Friends said she left a sister living at Buffalo, her father in Missouri, and a niece with whom she traveled around the world two or three years ago.

Miss White was married twice and each marriage ended in divorce. Her first husband was Victor Sutherland, an actor. They separated in 1914. Her second marriage, to Wallace McCutcheon, resulted in a divorce in 1921. Seven years later McCutcheon was found dead in Hollywood of a self-inflicted bullet wound.

Miss White was born at Green Ridge, Mo. When 6 years old she made her debut as Little Eva in "Uncle Tom's Cabin." As Little Eva she earned $5 a week for her parents.

At 13 she became a circus bareback rider. For several years she was on the stage and in 1913 she made her debut in the infant film industry.

Shaw Implies Chamberlain Is Bad as Hitler

Author Disdains Affection for Dictators, Mocks at Democracy.

By Joseph Driscoll.

Special Cable to The Post.

London, Aug. 4.—George Bernard Shaw, who became 82 years young on July 26, is growing tired of being classified as an admirer of dictatorship. He insisted today he still believes in democracy, if it can be found. His only complaint is that democracy, as practiced in England, is a fraud. He doesn't really crave to see a Hitler take over this country, but he hinted Hitler might be an improvement on Neville Chamberlain and his predecessors.

Fifty years ago, Shaw, then a red-bearded, gaunt young Socialist, fresh from Dublin, eked out a living writing articles on music for the Star, London's Liberal afternoon newspaper. Ever since he has continued on the best of terms with the paper of his space-writing days. Therefore, he was stung to the quick when the Star joined in the chorus of Liberal and Socialist papers which have been alarmed over Shaw's supposed conversion to fascism.

Letter to the Editor.

Like any other indignant reader, Shaw wrote to his paper:

"What I want to know," he began, "is how much the Star is being paid by Hitler and Mussolini to say that I am on the side of the dictators?"

Defending that point of view against the criticism of The Star, Shaw writes:

"What" I am trying to prove is that democracy as we know it is a fraud. The Government is so all-powerful that it can do what it likes with us.

"True, I Have Reputation."

"In dictator countries the press and channels of opinion are controlled. Here the Government is quite happy to let everyone say what he likes. It knows that whatever is said will not make the slightest difference, and that it can still go on in its own way.

"The man in the street can shout from a soapbox, but what influence has he? What influence have I? It is true that I have a certain reputation, but what I say makes little impression on the Government."

At Canal Zone, President Hails 'Neighbor' Plan

Tells of Catching 230-Lb. Shark, Landing Sailfish Without Hook.

By the Associated Press.

Balboa, C. Z., Aug. 4.—President Roosevelt said today that by and large the good neighbor policy in the Americas was working out very well.

The statement was made at a press conference shortly after the Chief Executive arrived here in glowing health from a 19-day fishing trip in the Pacific aboard the cruiser Houston.

Wearing an open-necked sport shirt, Mr. Roosevelt received United States and Central American newsmen aboard the Houston. He said the Chaco peace treaty signed by Bolivia and Paraguay showed what could be done by the entire American continent in favor of peace.

Sees Panama President.

President Juan D. Arosemena of Panama, Gov. Clarence S. Ridley of the Canal Zone, high Army and Navy dignitaries were received aboard the Houston for tea. Later 50 old-timers who spent at least four years on the original construction of the Panama Canal were guests at a Presidential reception.

At his press conference—his first in 30 days—Mr. Roosevelt told about winning the big fish prize yesterday afternoon when the Houston paused in its 540-mile trip from the Colos Islands.

The prize winner was a 230-pound shark which the President said was the biggest fish he ever caught.

A Hookless Catch.

Then he related that he caught a 100-pound sailfish several days ago—without a hook.

After feeling a strike on his line, he said, three sailfish besides the one on his line jumped out of the water. When his catch was dragged in his line was found tied around the fish's beak and the hook was gone.

Ely Culbertson Wins Dismissal of Lawsuit

New York, Aug. 4 (AP).—An amended complaint in a $1,000,000 damage suit for slander brought by Willard S. Karn, contract bridge expert, against Ely Culbertson and others, was dismissed in Supreme Court today, but Karn said he would appeal. Karn said the defendants circulated untrue rumors about him after he gained publicity through a play, movie shorts and a book he wrote on bridge.

Deadline Set For Utilities to Obey New Law

SEC Fixes Dec. 1 as Date 66 Firms Must Act to Simplify Setup.

By the Associated Press.

The Securities Commission made a major move yesterday to carry out the Roosevelt Administration's program of breaking up far-flung utility holding company networks into geographically "integrated" systems.

The agency set December 1 as the deadline for 66 companies to come forward with proposals for revamping their sructures under the integration and simplification sections of the holding company act.

The latter section limits the extent to which companies may be pyramided; that is, only one intermediate holding company and one top holding company may be superimposed on an operating company.

Suggestions Asked.

Chairman William O. Douglas wrote executives of the companies requesting that "suggestions, plans and programs" on both points be submitted to the commission even though they are tentative. He said the development of programs for integration in many cases will require action by two or more systems and suggested that a committee of utility executives act as a "clearing house of ideas." The overlapping territories of some of the companies will require their mutual attention in order to obtain concentrated geographical service areas, commission employes said.

The executives' committee was formed May 9 and Douglas recalled that it had "indicated its desire to work co-operatively on such problems."

The chairman made public his letter today with a statement reiterating his expressions before the American Bar Association at Cleveland in July that "before the year is out we will obtain from the various parts of the industry their plans and programs, so we can chart our course accordingly."

Co-operation Is Aim.

Douglas said that he wanted to emphasize that "we are not departing from our program for co-operative endeavor, but are seeking rather to implement the round-table technique with a concrete proposal to those who want to get on with the job." He repeated his Cleveland statement that he knew many leaders of the industry are "bent not on nullification or repeal, but on compliance. To all of them I pledge our wholehearted co-operation."

Douglas called attention to the fact that the December 1 deadline was 11 months after the effective date of the integration and simplification provisions of the act and more than three years since the act was passed. Enforcement had been held up pending action on the Electric Bond & Share case, which was finally settled by a Supreme Court decision in March.

Officials of the commission said that a number of holding companies have already submitted tentative programs. A hearing has been set for August 8 on the integration of one company—Utilities Light & Power Corporation. It will be the first such hearing held.

Government Speeds Flour To the Needy

Mills Are Asked to Quote From 300 to 90,000 Barrels This Week.

By Thomas M. Cahill.

To get flour and other wheat products to the needy as quickly as possible, the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation was requested yesterday by the Millers' National Federation to use the largest number of the Nation's mills in supplying flour to be bought for relief.

The commodities corporation may purchase the equivalent of 4,500,000 bushels of wheat, or approximately 1,000,000 barrels of flour in this first acquisition of the 1938-39 relief program. Mills have been asked to give bids on amounts ranging from 300 to 90,000 barrels of flour by the end of this week.

By distributing orders among the greatest number of mills and making later purchases more frequent and in smaller total amounts, the mills which turn the wheat into flour will be able to materially hasten deliveries, the federation informed the corporation. The millers' trade association also announced that suggestions had been made to the corporation on product standards to insure quality.

Purposes of Program.

The millers' federation's statement said "The two fundamental objectives of the Federal Government in this flour purchasing program are (1) to relieve the wheat surplus situation, and (2) to provide food for people who have no other means of obtaining the necessities of life. With these objectives the federation is in hearty sympathy, and anxious to co-operate with the Government in expeditiously furnishing these food supplies so necessary to relieve distress.

"The federation, therefore, has suggested to the Surplus Commodities Corporation that more frequent and smaller total purchases from the greatest number of mills be made so that deliveries may speedily reach the Government's agencies in charge of feeding so many families now without funds to buy food.

"Conscious of the Government's desire to furnish a commodity of a standard grade, the millers have made helpful suggestions to the Commodities Corporation on the type of flour and wheat products to be purchased, and the mills of the country are prepared to fill every order with goods that meet the strict government quality tests imposed."

Bankers Await New Gold Wave

New York, Aug. 4 (AP).—Prospects of a flow of gold from London to augment the United States' immense supply of the metal were seen in banking circles today. In terms of the dollar, the open market price of gold in London fell to about the point where it would become profitable for bankers to engage metal for shipment to New York.

After a sharp advance, the London gold price remained unchanged at 132 shillings ½ penny an ounce. But the British pound led a rally in foreign currencies against the dollar so that the equivalent for bar gold in the British financial center dipped to $34.76 an ounce compared with $34.78 yesterday.

—Treasury Watchful.

By the Associated Press.

Roswell Magill, Undersecretary, said today the Treasury was watching closely pressure on the pound sterling abroad. Asked whether he believed the United States could do anything to relieve pressure on the British currency, Magill said: "I don't think there is anything for us to say about it at this time—we are keeping our eyes on it."

Wheat Rally Follows Drop On Peace News

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Aug. 4. — Simultaneous with reports of peace overtures by Japan to Russia, the Chicago wheat market recorded ⅝ of a cent setback late today, then rallied slightly. Minimizing of war talk was aided by big shipments of wheat out of Russia, more than triple those of a year ago. Word of bright prospects for Argentina's new wheat crop attracted notice also.

Most of the time, however, wheat values here hardly moved, with traders showing a pronounced disposition to hold off pending announcement of an official guaranteed price expected to be accorded Canadian farmers.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were ⅛@½ cent lower compared with yesterday's finish, September 67¼, December 68¾@68⅞; corn unchanged to ½ higher, September 54¾@54⅞, December 52⅜@52½; oats unchanged to ¼ off; rye unchanged to ⅛ down, and provisions, varying from 10 cents decline to an advance of 2 cents.

The Market

By C. Norman Stabler, A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Mark Time in Curtailed Trading With Gold Shares in Demand.

New York, Aug. 4.—Irregularity continued as trading in stocks slumped off to the lowest level in about six weeks today. Quieting of the fears of war on the Siberian frontier, the prospect of the offering of several large new security issues and the defeat of the C. I. O. in the Maytag strike in Iowa as well as the growing probability that the Lewis forces will have to back water in the steel industry gave investors as much cheer as they have had on any recent day but it was not sufficient to shake the stock market out of the doldrums.

Only 609,600 shares changed hands on the big board and the composite average showed a meaningless rise of 0.15 point. Gold stocks continued in favor, reflecting the rush into the metal on the free market in London, and both McIntyre and Homestake sold at new high price for the year.

Metal, steel and motor shares were firm to higher, the rails held on despite the breakdown of negotiations for the proposed 15 per cent wage cut and only a few stocks showed any special pressure. As on other recent days, the vast majority of fluctuations were fractional and there was no rush to get to either side of the market.

Bearish forces are watching for a corrective reaction following the June-July rise and the bullish forces are counting on a seasonal improvement in business with the approach of the fall months, but at the moment neither is making any headway.

In the foreign exchange market the pound recovered slightly after its pressure of recent days but the demand for gold for hoarding purposes continued. Gold was bought in London for export to this country yesterday, on one of the dips in sterling. On the previous day there was such a purchase but the metal was resold at a profit later. In the case of yesterday's purchase, however, it is understood the metal will be shipped.

Peace Overtures.

Peace overtures to Russia from Japan brought a sharp recovery in the group of Japanese bonds and contributed to some of the selling noted in the wheat market. Despite the seriousness of the clashes on the Siberian front, the prevailing opinion in the financial district has been that the trouble would be patched up as soon as all faces could be saved, as Japan could hardly wish to take on another adversary at this time and Russia would find it difficult to wage a major conflict so far from headquarters. In any event the war fears were eased today.

Motors and aviation issues were prominent on the ticker today. General Motors again being the most active issue and adding more than a point, with Greyhound second and Chrysler third. Both Curtiss-Wright issues were active and higher and there was good support for United States Rubber. Yellow Truck, Goodrich and Anaconda Steel added more than a point. Loew's was up 1½ on an increase in the dividend. Phelps Dodge, and the earnings of which will be made public today, was well liked in the metal division. Phillip Morris, despite reliable reports of a split in the stock, gave up a point on profit taking.

While the rails held on, they were held in check somewhat by the expectation of lower carloadings, to be reported today. There was not much change in the leading utilities.

Among the commodities, wheat was subjected to selling on the more peaceful outlook in Siberea and also to reports of big shipments from Russia and bright prospects for the Argentine crop. Declines were small, however, the close being down ⅛ to ½ cent. Cotton was sluggish, advancing 4 to 5 points when offerings appeared light.

Japanese Bonds Rally.

After a week of declining prices, Japanese bonds rallied in the listed market today, owing to moves toward amicable adjustment of the border dispute with Russia. Gains of 1 to 4 points wiped out only a part of recent losses. Other sections of the bond market were dull, with the cheaper interest-paying rails inclined to lose ground. Baltimore & Ohio and Lehigh Valley issues were especially heavy on the endeavors to put off interest payments on some issues. Highest rated bonds were neglected. Turnover in all issues was $5,590,000.

Borderline railroad bonds were traded heavily at losses of 1 to 3 points, owing to the interest-deferment moves. Only a few issues resisted the trend, and some of the better rated bonds also joined the tendency. Default carrier liens were sold and closed with losses. Rail holding bonds were quiet, however, and utility holding issues held their ground.

United States Treasury bonds showed more small losses than gains, but the market level was undisturbed. Guaranteed bonds of the farm and home corporations were also quiet. Best grade utility bonds held in the corporate section, despite the imminence of the new $37,500,000 financing for Indianapolis Power & Light Co. United States Steel debentures moved to a new high on a small gain.

Japanese government, municipal and utility bonds snapped back 1 to 4 points in quiet trading, but all remain at heavy discounts. The high grade issues of Argentina, Canada, Australia and Scandinavia were maintained. European default bonds were dull, and Latin-American disregarded pledges also failed to attract any interest.

Cotton Higher; December 8.58

New York, Aug. 4. (AP).—Cotton moved slightly higher today as a moderate scattering demand revealed a scarcity of contracts. December advanced from 8.52 to 8.61 and closed at 8.58, with final prices 4 to 5 points net higher.

The market opened 1 point higher to 1 lower with the effect of slightly easier Liverpool cables offset by further showers east of the Mississippi River. Trade buying orders at around the basis of 8.50 for December and a little Liverpool buying help the tone.

A private estimate placing the crop at 10,572,000 bales was the smallest of the private reports issued thus far. It compared with an estimate of 10,435,000 bales from the same source last month.

Idle Funds Drop $120,000,000

By the Associated Press.

The Federal Reserve Board reported yesterday that excess reserves of member banks declined $120,000,000 during the week to a total of about $2,920,000,000.

During the week ended August 3 member bank reserves balances decreased $114,000,000. Reductions in member bank reserves were attributed to increases of $49,000,000 in circulating money, $29,000,000 in treasury cash, $43,000,000 in treasury deposits with Federal Reserve banks, and $8,000,000 in nonmember deposits and other Federal Reserve accounts and a decrease of $9,000,000 in Reserve bank credit.

These factors were offset in part by increases of $23,000,000 in gold stock and $2,000,000 in treasury currency.

ICC Seeks to Wipe Out Monon Stockholders

By the Associated Press

An Interstate Commerce Commission examiner proposed yesterday that both preferred and common stockholders be wiped out in reorganizing the Chicago, Indianapolis & Louisville (Monon) Railway Co. The examiner, Milo H. Brinkley, suggested that control of the Monon be taken away from the Southern Railway Co. and the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co.

The L. & N. and the Southern each owns $4,902,450 of par value, or 46.7 per cent of the common stock, and $1,936,700 par value, or 36.8 per cent of the preferred stock. In addition to wiping out their holdings, Brinkley recommended that notes of $1,170,366 held by them be canceled. All claims of general creditors also would be eliminated. Brinkley proposed a capitalization of $34,000,000 for the reorganized Monon. This compares with a present capitalization of about $42,000,000.

'I'm New Occupant —Peace!' — Divine Gets a Big Mansion

New York, Aug. 4 (AP).—Father Divine, the colored cult Messiah, today punched the doorbell of a 24-room mansion on upper Madison avenue at East 122nd street, on the fringe of Harlem, and announced:

"I am the new occupant. Peace!"

The big house, equipped with its own private telephone system, was presented to Father Divine by the same mysterious source which last week got him a 500-acre country place at Krum Elbow, across the Hudson River from President Roosevelt's family estate at Hyde Park.

A white agent of Father Divine purchased the house recently from Dr. Elihu Katz, stomach specialist, whose first knowledge that the colored evangelist was the buyer came when Father Divine came to the front door.

ZaSu Out-ZaSued by D. C. Girl In Contest Impersonating Star

Fluttery Screen Comedienne Enters Under Alias; Tries Rumba With Puerto Rican Mayor but Gives It Up as Bad Job.

Zasu Pitts flopped twice in Washington yesterday, once when she tried to dance the rumba and again when she tried to imitate herself in a broadcast of Zasu imitations. In the first instance, she just couldn't; in the second, she came in second.

Winner of the radio contest, broadcast over WJSV, was Virginia O'Neill, of 1667 Wisconsin avenue northwest, who got 68 votes from litseners-in. As Irma Lait, of Charlotte, N. C., Zasu rand second, but second prize was given to Alma Browning, of Alexandria, Va., who got 23 tallies. Sally Smith, of the roller-skating team now appearing at the Earle Theater, was third.

The fluttery film star's attempt at the rumba was with Don Jose Tormos Diego, Mayor of Ponce, Puerto Rico, who was introduced to her in the lobby of their hotel by Jose Vivas, Don Jose's secretary, as a joke. Miss Pitts bewailed her lack of Puerto Rican, but the mayor waded into the English language with startling results. He had recently undergone an operation for appendicitis, which did not deter him from the rumba.

"By damn," said he "these doctor he's put too much bandage for the belly. But I dance just the same."

Miss Pitts wrung her hands. "Oh, dear," she cried, "if I could only talk Puerto Rican."

The mayor was on the telephone calling all his friends, though it was very early in the morning. "Come see, I'm making danze with nice American girl," he chortled.

Later, at luncheon, they ran into a snag again when Zasu had a salad with roquefort cheese.

Said the mayor: "I'm loving you, but these cheese she's making too much stink."

Japan Considers Airlines to Guam

Japan is contemplating an airline linking that nation with the American-owned island of Guam and the trans-Pacific clipper service, the Department of Commerce was advised yesterday by its commercial attache at Tokyo. The information was that Japan would spend $1,960,000, to be sought in next year's budget, in inaugurating the line.

The service would connect Tokyo with Palau in the Caroline Islands via Guam, and Takao and Palau with Yaluit in the Marshall Islands, the attache said. Director Denis Mulligan of the Bureau of Air Commerce said he knew nothing of overtrures by Japan and the State Department withheld comment.

Some officials said privately they did not believe the United States would favor any such argument at this time in view of unsettled conditions in the Far East.

Bob Burns Says—

There's one thing that can cause more hard feelin's than anything else I know of—and that's holdin' a grudge. Two fellas will get mad at each other and let things simmer and simmer. Now that's no way to act. They oughta square off and settle it and then be friendly or settle it some other way.

Just like my Aunt Boo did when she was gettin' ready to marry my Uncle Fud. She says "I've got all my bridesmaids picked out. First, there's Luta, and . . ." Uncle Fud says "Wait a minute. I thought you didn't like Luta," and Aunt Boo says "But I'm going to be married in yellow and you know what that'll do to Luta's complexion."
